Lucky at Last.

Some years ago I know a lapidary who gained a considerable fortune by a great misfortune.

One day Montin received from his master a diamond of the finest water to cut and polish.

During the morning his employer came to see how the polishing of the diamond proceeded.

For more than an hour he remained almost motionless, and was only roused from his lethargy by the entrance of his master.

Montin looked wildly at him without uttering a word.

"What is the matter with you?" asked the jeweller.

"I am a most unfortunate accident, no doubt," said he.

"I believe you," replied the jeweller. "I have every confidence in you; you are a good workman; I will furnish you with plenty of work."

Women and Wine.

Woman has never been associated with wine without disgrace and disaster.

Of the worst foes that woman has ever had to encounter, wine stands at the head.

At this sight his emotion became almost as great as when he had just disappeared out of the window.

"What?" said the jeweller.

"My diamond, or rather yours. Ah, do not touch it, we shall lose it forever."

"It is true; it is certainly the diamond that has so tormented us; but the difficulty is how to get it."

"Leave it in your hands, sir, if you will be kind enough to keep it for me."

Young gentlemen who would prosper in love should woo gently. It is not fashionable (?) for young ladies to tread ardent spirits.

Carlyle's Study.

HOW A GREAT WRITER WORKS.

A contributor to the Independent gives the following sketchy account of Thomas Carlyle's study.

The studio is a part of the mental development. Do not blame a man for the style of his literary apartments, any more than you would for the color of his hair.

Carlyle's study was a room in the house where he lived. It was a small room, but it was a room where he could think and write.

Assembling of the Legislature.

Rev. R. H. Cain, ex-State Senator, and at present editor of the Missionary Record, a paper published in this city in the interest of the colored race, sometimes comes down to a sensible view of matters.

The General Assembly of this State meets on the third Tuesday in this month, to transact the business of the people.

Women as Workers.

Elizabeth Stuart Phelps sums up in the Independent some of the things enterprising women have done—showing that a sensible woman can do work she is more likely to do than to travel about the country crying over the "wrongings" she has to endure, or clamoring for her "rights."

In the capital of a stout-hearted, if not very broad-shouldered little New England State, one of the best blacksmiths in the city is said to be a young woman, she works side by side with her father, of whom she acquired her trade.

In one of the Territories we find two young women; sisters, running a blacksmith's shop on their own account.

In Wisconsin two girls, whose works rise up and call them blessed, have for six years managed a farm of one hundred acres, and supported their father and mother from its proceeds.

The same State estimates that there are in all two thousand women at work this year in its numerous fields.

Low and Indiana contain two hundred women working farms on their own account successfully.

Of a woman in Washington Territory we learn that she has just returned from a trip to China, where she carried a cargo of lumber.

Of an extensive dry goods establishment in New Jersey we are told that it is managed entirely by two ladies, and that their credit in the large business centres is of the soundest and highest.

A ladies' life insurance company, all the employees of which are to be women, is forming in London.
