Hard times prevail all over the councity is said to be something apalling. Never in the history of that city has been been promised exemption there been such a constantly increasing army of homeless unceployed ones. The many benevolent institutions are taxed to their utmost, and the papers daily make demands for means to fill the exhausted coffers of the charitable associations. Collections are taken upon Sundays in the churches to buy food and clothing for the starving poor; and the ladies of the different congregations meet daily in the church rooms, and sew, and distribute articles among the needy, without regard to creed, or caste, or kind. In Jersey City, Brooklyn, and New York, alone, are 600,000 people crowded into tenement houses, often forty or fifty families living in one tenement! There are 170,000 living in 2,700 tenements; and, with all that public and private charity can do, how are these people to be fed and elethed while thrown out of work The increase of crime and evil doing is owing to the increased pauperism.
