Poetry. THE NINETY AND NINE. There were ninety and nine that safely lay In the shelter of the fold, But one was out on the hills away, Far off from the gates of gold, Away on the mountains wild and bare, Away from the shepherd's care. 'Lord, thou hast here thy ninety and nine; Are they not enough for thee?' But the shepherd made an answer, 'This of mine Has wandered away from me; And altho' the road be rough and steep, I go to the desert to find my sheep.' But none of the ransomed ever knew How deep were the waters crossed; Nor how dark was the night that the Lord passed through Ere he found his sheep that was lost. Out in the desert he heard his cry— Sick and helpless and ready to die. 'Lord, whence are those blood-drops all the way, That mark out the mountains track?' 'They were shed for one who had gone astray Ere the shepherd could bring him back.' 'Lord, whence are thy hands so rent and torn?' 'They are pierced to-night by many a thorn.' And thro' the mountains, thunder-iven, And up the rocky steep, There rose a cry to the gate of heaven, 'Rejoice! I have found my sheep!' 'Rejoice for the Lord brings back his own!'

this intelligence, and glanced toward me. As for myself, I was trembling with conflicting emotions. 'Let me hear the particulars?' I asked, quickly. 'I will tell you all I know,' replied the lady. 'The count was found sitting in his chair with a poniard driven to the hilt in his heart. He must have fallen asleep and been attacked in that state.' 'What time did it occur?' asked the doctor, briefly. 'About three o'clock they discovered him, and then his body was not quite cold. The countess was immediately suspected of the crime. She was engaged in feeding the pigeons when they arrested her, and there was blood upon her delicate hands.'

miscellaneous. THE EDITORS. The editors of Indiana had a grand reunion at Lafayette, the other day, and I was constrained to stop and join them, for verily were they not going to open a keg of nails and cut a melon? Happy, innocent, guileless men, these editors! How little they know of the world and its sordid cares; how little they know of its wrangling strifes and its noisy wars; how little they see of its irredeemable and fluctuating currencies; how sublimely, magnificently seldom do they light upon the combination of its safe lock. Ah, men of a busy, heartless, money-getting world, editors have no money. We have something better. We have calm, unmoved and unmovable, sleeping consciences, that you couldn't quicken with a stroke of lightning. What a priceless treasure is such a conscience! Journalism is the profession without jealousy. I don't believe there is a profession in the world so free from jealousy as this. Look at musical people. They are the worst in the lot. Music hath charms to soothe a savage, but it has no power to tame the ferocity of people who play, and sing, and teach it. An opera company, without a black eye, is an unheard-of wonder. All through the opera season the frightened air is full of the loud wranglings of warring tenor and soprano, contralto and basso. Every mail brings to our ears the crash of another footstool Christine Nilsson has kicked over. And a church choir—why, I never knew but one choir that didn't have a chronic row on its hands dating back as far as the tariff bill, and more complicated than the Louisiana investigation. And that one broke up the first Sunday. One of the first indications of a revival in the church is when the soprano and alto get on speaking terms with each other. And at a musical festival, did you ever notice how the chorus stood back and glared at the solo? It is awful. But with us there is none of that feeling. We love each other. And when, in the course of our political duties as standard bearers, we feel constrained to call an esteemed contemporary a 'measureless liar,' he knows we mean business, and if he is a man who will get mad at a little trivial thing like that, he comes over with a club and mashes us, and that is the end of it. We may have occasion to denounce him, in the heat and passion of the conflict, as a 'moral hyena, whose foul and fustering chops drip gall and aquafortis, a mocker and destroyer of the truth, upon whose vicious lips the dear pure truth, if ever it could spring from a heart so blackened and stained with crime, turns to ashes and bitterness before it can be uttered.' We may feel it our duty to call an esteemed contemporary a 'paltering slave to a ring of petty tyrants,' 'an unprincipled scoundrel, whose grovelling carcass, wallowing in the cesspool of political corruption, steeped to his thievish eyes in abhorrent partisan infamy, pursues its nefarious traffic to the very shadow of the mocking gallows it has cheated too long.' We get mad at these things sometimes, dreadful mad, awful mad. But we get over it, especially if the other man is the biggest.

Hard Times in 1819-20. People who now complain so much of hard times would do well to read the following from Ben-ton's 'Thirty Years' Recollections.' He says: 'The years of 1819-20 were a period of gloom and agony. No money, either gold or silver; no paper convertible into specie; no measure or standard of value left remaining. The local banks, all but those of New England, after a brief resumption of specie payments, again sank into a state of suspension. The Bank of the United States, created as a remedy for all these evils, now at the head of the evil, prostrate and helpless, with no power left but that of suing its debtors and selling their property, and purchasing for itself at its own nominal price. No price for prosperity or produce, no sales but those of the Sheriff and the Marshal; no purchasers at the execution sales but creditor or a hoarder of money; no employment for industry; no demand for labor; no sales for the product of the farm; no sound of hammer but that of the auctioneer knocking down property. Stop laws, property laws, the replevin laws, loan office laws, the intervention of the Legislature between the creditor and the debtor—this was the business of legislation in three-fourths of the States of the Union—of all South and West of New England. No medium of exchange but depreciated paper; no change even but little bits of foul paper, marked so many cents and signed by so many tradesmen, barbers, or innkeepers; exchanges deranged to the extent of fifty or one hundred per cent. Distress, the universal demand, thundered at the door of all Legislatures, State and Federal.'

Selected Story. A MYSTERY UNRAVELLED. I had been 'doing' the continent in a rambling way and had stopped for a few days at Venice. Here I met my old college chum, Dick Glover. The latter had become a famous doctor within the last few years. Having at last married a rich and handsome young widow, he had concluded to take a short period of relaxation, and hence his presence in this distant clime. Of course he was overjoyed to see me, and having been there long enough to know something of the place, he volunteered to show me around. 'By George!' I exclaimed, suddenly, as we stopped before the piazza San Marco. 'There's as handsome a picture as I ever saw. Innocence personified.' A young and most beautiful girl stood before us, engaged in feeding the pigeons. The birds were marvelously tame, and approached her fearlessly, even lighting on her hands. 'Did you ever see a more attractive sight?' I asked my friend, enthusiastically, as we passed on. 'Hum! I don't know,' was the rather doubtful reply. 'Ramor has been busy about that lady's name of late.' 'In what way?' I asked indignantly. 'I never saw a sweet-er face in all my life.'
