THE COW PEA.

The cow pea is worthy of being introduced to every farmer. Its value as an article of food for man and beast, the large crops of fodder (bushy vine) it produces, its adaptation to the lightest and poorest soils, and its usefulness as a green manurial crop, place it far above many other plants that are grown to its exclusion. It has no enemies among the insects, and is in that particular free from dam age. A heavy crop of it will so completely cover the ground that not even a ray of sunshine can enter, and it is often necessary to pass over the vines with a heavy roller in order to get them plowed under. From twenty to forty bushels of the peas are usually produced to an acre, and if they have been well manured previous to seeding, the crep of hay will be very large. One of the most important advantages the pea confers on land is the shading it gives, some experienced farmers contending that by this method it rather improves the soil than injures it. A small outlay will enable any one to try the cow pea, and those who have not grown it should do so.

The cow pea, though called a pea, is properly a bean. It will grow on soil that scarcely produces anything, but is, however, sensible to the effects of good manuring, and rewards the farmer for such treatment with bountiful yields. It is indigenous to the Middle States and the South, preferring a warm season and dry soil. There are a great many varieties of it, the most prolific being the Crowder, but the 'black eved' is preferred for the table.

As a renovator of the soil, next to clover, it has no equal. Growing with a heavy, dense foliage, plowed under just at the period of blossoming, it makes a splendid green manure, rotting quickly and producing lasting effects. It can be grown for this purpose on land that will not produce clover, and that is a very important item. On inferior land that has had a crop of cow peas turned under, if a light sprinkling of lime is added, a venture may safely be made with clover the following year. It is planted about the same time with corn. It can be sown for hay, but care must be taken in harvesting it properly. If allowed to get too ripe the leaves will crumble off after it is stowed away in the loft; but if cut when in full blossom, or just as the young pods begin to form, and then cured like ordinary hay, it will keep well all the winter. Cows eat it with relish, and for sheep, nothclean, being very fond of it. The tation, produces the diarrhoa. seeds are more nutritious than our National Live Stock Journal, Chiordinary white bean, stock preferring it when cooked, to corn or meal, while calves are raised on a staple article of food.

Briefly, it may be said nothing is so good for the purpose as dry powdery ashes, taken from the ash-pit before they have been wet, and put under a cover of some kind to prevent them from becoming so. One bushel or so of dry ashes will do for a dozen or more fowls dusting in for a considerable ength of time, and when a little powdered sulphur is shaken over the heap occasionally it makes it sweeter and more effective. There is something too, in the manner of putting down the ashes. We have ad dry ashes lying under a dust ing shed for a month or more with out a bird attempting to take a roll in it, and all for the simple reason that the ashes were spread out level and not laid in a heap. When the same ashes were thrown up in to a round mound there was a crowd around it in a short time, cratching, and before long nothing but an intricate rolling mass of hens' tails, wings, heads and feet. It is a curious circumstance, which dare say many besides myself will have observed, that some fowls have very little inclination to scrape on the level ground, but as soon as an elevation of any loose matter is Largest and placed within their reach they go into it with energy, and this always induces fowls which are backward in dusting to pass through the leaning process.

CALCIMINE.—Whitewash rubs off the walls upon the hands and clothing; calcimine does not. Calcimine-prepared kaolin-can be obtained at almost any drug store at a trifling cost. To prepare it for use place it in a vessel of suitable size, then scald it with sufficient water to make it the consis tency of hot mush; let it partially cool: then thin down with skimmed milk to the proper conistency for use. Skimmed milk is best, as the fatty or butter part of new milk would spoil the mixture. Observe these directions and the material will be ready for use. Apply with a whitewash brush. This mixture will work smoothly and not drag under the brush as most mixtures for whitewash. It can be colored to suit the taste of those using it.
