MANURE MADE, UNDER COVER.

Of course all the advantage of making manure in covered yards, may be secured by box feeding, with less outlay for roofing, since more space must be allowed for a given number of animals turned loose together, than when confined in stalls; it is the protection from rain and sun, the abundant use of litter, and its thorough incorporation with the excrements, and the exclusion of air by compact treading, which go to make the superior manure; all these features of the method work against the loss of valuable plant food. Nor does box feeding and constant accumulation of the manure under the feet of the animals necessarily imply offensive stalls. Mr. Lawrence, above quoted, said that everybody noticed the general sweetness of his stalls; it is only essential that enough litter be used to absorb all liquids, and this absorption is more effectual if the straw is cut up.

One method or the other boxfeeding or covered yards, should be adopted by every farmer who lives where manure is worth saving, and who finds himself compelled to supplement his stable manure with commercial fertilizers Stable manure must not be lost sight of, in this increasing interest in these concentrated fertilizers, for we cannot produce our crops and have enough for ourselves and others, without its aid; and there is nothing in all the list of commercial mixtures, which give so good an average return for the money invested in it, as well-made stable manure.-Prof. Caldwell, in American Agriculturist for October.

WHEAT HARVESTING .- Wheat cut early avoids waste from shelling and makes whiter flour, but the flour from early cut wheat contains more starch in proportion to the gluten than the flour from wheat cut after it is fully ripe. The microscope shows that the starch and gluten are not formed in the grain at precisely the same period ; the starch cells in the interior of the kernel are filled with starch granules some days before the gluten cells, next the bran, are quite full. Hence, wheat allowed to get as ripe as possible to avoid waste, makes, not whiter, but better, because more glutenous flour than that from wheat cut early. The rather common practice of allowing wheat to stand in the shock until time to thrash, has perhaps the advantage of saving once handling, but if it remains in the field until one kernel in a hundred gets sprouted, irreparable mischief is of Jeff Davis' book in the South, done to the flour. Wheat taken and still have many orders.
