by Pastor Spooner's allusion to the White Oaks, and the charcoal busi ness, which his son Kier still follows. He said, "I guess there's more truth than poetry in what Mr. Spooner says. The White Oaks looks jest as it used to when I was a boy, and, for the life o' me, I don't see enny chance for improvenient. Ye see, the, country is rocky, and the sile takes as naterally to white birches, pitch pine, and scrub oaks as a duck does to water. If a feller gets a livin' at all, up there, he's got to git it selling wood, and charcoal. Nuthin else pays, and that don't much. If a feller undertakes to clear up land, it costs more than it comes to, to git the stones out, so he can plow, and, if he sows rye, or plants corn, the crop won't pay, without manure, and where's your manure coming from when ye're ten miles from the shore and sea weed, and haven't got anything but charcoal or wood to buy it with? Ye see, it's up-hill business for the White Oaks, and it is no use to talk about the fairs doing the White Oakers enny good. Fact is, they don't go much, and it's just play dance music, and the dollar is as well as if they did. And it used toward paying the preacher. ain't much better here in Hookertown. He knew Deacon Smith and Squire Bunker and them folks that had money plenty raised bet ter things than they used to, and took premiums, and they might make it pay, but he had sent United States. This is more than things to the fair for several years, but never got a red cent for a pre mium. My wife, Polly, gits premiums on butter, bread, and bed quilts, sometimes, and comes home so sot up that there's no livin' with her for a week after the fair. But it don't seem to be for me to git anything in that line, and I have pretty much made up my mind that the fairs are 'all talk and no

WHEAT, OAT, AND BARLEY SMUT .-All persons who address us upon the subject of Smut ask for the remedy or remedies, and this is a part of the subject that is very difficult to treat. The Smut plant is so small in it's beginnings, and also so rapid in its growth, that its presence is not known upon the grain until its destructive work is done. If the smut en ters the plant from spores which cling to, and are sown with, the grain, it is to be expected that a thorough cleaning of the grain would be a proper precaution. The application of any substance that would kill the spores and not injure the grain, naturally suggests itself. The soaking of the grain in a solution of sulphate of copper (blue vitriol), followed by an application of lime, has proved of value. Pre cautionary measures of this nature to rid the field of Smut is to pass through it and gather and burn all the affected ears and stalks. In this way the many millions of spores are kept from being spread and continuing the pest. With the smaller grains, as wheat and oats, this method, though it is the most effective, would probably be impracticable. Though the remedy is American Agriculturist for October. fled.

Rare-cooked fresh meats are far more easily digested and furnish much more real nutriment than those "well done." Habit will make one enjoy the rare cooked steak as certainly better as food.
