THE FLOOD IN THE WEST.—We extract the following paragraphs from the New Orleans Picayune of Monday afternoon, April 12:

THE LEVEES—CREVASSES, &c.—Yesterday was a trying day for the levees which wall off the waters from our city and the plantations in its neighborhood. The rain fell in torrents and the wind blew violently, so that the waters were forced somewhat above their ordinary level. Within the limits of Jefferson City there were no less than three breaches in the levee of from ten to fifteen feet each, but as a close watch was kept, no time was lost in the endeavor to close them, and, fortunately, each attempt was successful.

Yesterday morning the river broke through the levee at John M. Bell's plantation, opposite to Jefferson City, and though immediate attempts were made to close it, they proved wholly unsuccessful. Before night the breach was widened to at least one hundred and fifty feet, and every hour tended still to increase its width. Through this wide opening a flood of at least twelve feet in depth rushed like a young Niagara, presenting at the same time a grand and fearful spectacle. The whole plantation is converted into a vast lake, which is constantly enlarging its borders, and will, in the course of a few days, render boat navigation necessary in the streets of Gretna, McDonoughville and Algiers. The destruction of property resulting from this crevasse will prove immense.

NEW ORLEANS, April 12.—A crevasse opposite to this city is doing immense damage. Some five or six crevasses are reported between this city and Vicksburg, Mississippi. There has been, and continues to be, immense destruction of property on plantations and towns and settlements on the river.

The Chattanooga Advertiser of the 15th inst. says: "We learn by an endorsement on the Little Rock, Arkansas, letter package, received here yesterday morning, that the town of Napoleon is fifteen feet under water.

A DISTURBANCE IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—Yesterday, soon after the adjournment of the House of Representatives, the Hon. Mr. Craige, of North Carolina, and a man named Helper, formerly of the same State, and author of an abolition work called "The Impending Crisis," had a slight personal collision in the hall. The "States" has the following version of the affray:

"A member who was sitting not far from Mr. Craige, states that a conversation of so marked a character as to arrest attention had been carried on some time between the two, when, finally, Mr. Craige told Helper to go away, and that he wished to have no difficulty with him. Helper made some insolent reply, and Mr. Craige reached out his hand as if to seize him. This Helper resented by a blow, or an attempt at a blow.

A fisticuff, lasting a minute or two, but ending in no material injury to either party, ensued. The rencontre commenced in the centre aisle, and ended in the space in front of the clerk's desk. Members rushed in and separated the belligerents.

According to the Star, Mr. Helper felt himself aggrieved by some recent remarks of Mr. Biggs in the Senate. It appears a Northern Senator, in a speech, had quoted from Helper's work something concerning slavery at the South, whereupon Senator Biggs indulged in remarks not very complimentary to the author. This induced Helper to endeavor to ascertain who had thus "posted" Mr. Biggs, and as Mr. Craige came from the district where he (Helper) formerly resided in North Carolina, he approached him under the conviction that he was the informant.

Helper was taken before a magistrate by the sergeant-at-arms, and in the afternoon held to bail to keep the peace. Senator Hale and Montgomery Blair appeared as his counsel. Upon searching Helper, immediately after his arrest, a pistol and a bowie-knife were found on his person.

CHARMS.—A fortune of twenty thousand pounds. Counter-charms—Pretty shop-girls.

Execution of an ex-Minister in New Orleans.

The execution of George W. Stovall, formerly of Virginia, and once a Baptist minister, for the murder of Mary Ray Durand, with whom he was living at the time, took place in New Orleans on Friday, the 17th inst. The Picayune gives the following account of the execution:

At quite an early hour all those who had the open sesame to the Parish Prison, began to assemble, there being a general anxiety manifested to see how a man of education and good intellectual powers would approach such a doom as that which had been assigned to Stovall by the laws of his country.

When we entered the prison yard, our ears were first greeted by the sounds of sacred music, which came from the doomed man's cell, and Stovall's own strong and peculiar voice could easily be distinguished by its earnest energy. In the cell with him were the Rev. Dr. Palmer and other pastors of Protestant churches, and after the hymn was over prayers were in succession offered to the throne of the Most High. The occasion was a solemn and impressive one, and all present seemed to sympathize with the position of the unfortunate culprit.

Mingling freely among those who had assembled, we ascertained that the general wish was that the Governor would yield to the prayer of those who were endeavoring to procure a commutation of the prisoner's sentence, and hopes to that effect appeared the more sanguine as the Governor arrived in town last night, and could be the more readily appealed to.

In the expectation that the appeal to Executive clemency would not be in vain, the sheriff delayed the execution of the sentence till after 11 o'clock, but at that hour it was definitely ascertained that the sentence would not be commuted, and preparations were at once commenced for vindicating the law's sternest vengeance.

Shortly after 11, the prisoner, dressed in white, and attended by his religious advisers, was led to the spot where the fatal trap had been prepared. His step was firm, and his appearance venerable and imposing. Directed by a motion, he took his seat, and the executioner adjusted the fatal noose.—The prisoner then, after making some remarks thanking the officers of the prison for their kindness to him, said:

"Now, gentlemen, I must tell you that I have not been brought to this end because I didn't know better. I was raised in —— county, Va., by respectable parents, and received a pious education. Indeed, I may say I occupied a respectable position in society. But I fell, and for the last fifteen years I have been led captive by the devil, at his will, and now, by an ignoble death, I am about to receive the wages of sin. I have even held the position of a miuister of the gospel, and beloved and respected as such, but this only shows the height from which I have fallen, and from which all are liable to fall, if they yield to their baser feelings.

For ten years past I have followed the path of ruin in New Orleans, and here a misfortune happened to me which darkened all my future life, but to which I do not wish more particularly to refer. I intend to cast blame on no one but myself. Afterwards, I went to Nicaragua, but being forced to return again, gave loose rein to my vile propensities, and in due course of time, became the murderer that I am today.

"Though late, I have returned from my wanderings to my Saviour—to the merciful Jesus, who to the dying thief said, "This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise."—I feel that my spirit is like a caged bird, anxious to escape from its prison and seek refuge in the Paradise of God. Oh that I may have the happiness of meeting you all there! Lord, sanctify this death to the salvation of the spectators. Let my prayer and my words go forth to the uttermost parts of the earth! Oh gracious God, make us penitent in thy presence!"

These remarks were made with a firm and unwavering voice, and after the prisoner closed, the Rev. Dr. Palmer offered up an impressive prayer for the culprit.

When the prayer was ended, the prisoner bade a last farewell to Dr. Delory, Dr. Palmer and the officers of the prison. He then, after the cap was pulled down over his eyes, exclaimed in a loud voice, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." As he uttered these words the trap fell, and his spirit took its flight to the realms of the Hereafter.

ST. LOUIS, April 16.—Yesterday the remains of Col. Benton were exposed in state in Mercantile Library Hall, which was most appropriately draped in mourning. They were visited by at least 25,000 persons. The final rites of sepulture took place this morning, and were participated in by the military and benevolent societies, firemen, members of the city councils, and the citizens generally. As a general thing business was suspended, the stores and houses were draped in mourning, and the streets densely crowded with thousands of spectators.

TERRIBLE GALE AT AUBURN, ALA.—A terrible storm of rain and wind passed over Auburn, Ala., on Sunday last, destroying property to a great extent. A correspondent of the Montgomery Mail thus describes it:

The wind commenced blowing stiffly about four o'clock. It increased in power and in wildness, tearing the young twigs from the trees and strewing the street with leaves. In the North was seen an almost continuous stream of the most vivid lightning, accompanied with terrific peals of thunder. The storm broke in its fury over our village at about half-past four. It continued but a few minutes at a maximum, and gradually subsided. But during these few minutes, much of the beauty of our town was destroyed forever, while several houses were badly injured, and palings and fences levelled to the ground. Four or five of the principal stores had their front parapet walls blown down, including among others, the drug store occupied by Mr. Geo. Dixon, and the grocery store of Mr. Thomas Slaton.

The dwelling house of Mr. Philpot, formerly a resident of your city, was completely unroofed; his kitchen blown down and his fences destroyed. The piazza of the old Hotel, now occupied by Mr. Geo. Foster, was torn entirely away. Large flakes of tin, from the roof of the Male College, which had not been fastened down, were scattered over the streets. The steeple of the Baptist Church was blown down. A large oak tree fell across a corner of the Male Academy, smashing it badly. Several of our large oaks were blown up, while the number of the shade trees, and smaller oaks that lie scattered in every direction is beyond estimation. Numbers of stables and other out-houses were destroyed. Yet, in the midst of it all, we ought to be thankful that no person was injured seriously.—How so many could escape unhurt is indeed wonderful. The storm confined itself to a very narrow strip, not more than a half mile. It came from a southwesterly direction.

DEATH OF AN EX-SENATOR.—General Wm. Marks, who was a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature as early as 1810, and for six years President of the Senate of that State, died on Saturday last. In 1827 he was elected to the United States Senate, and served a term of six years. In this distinguished body he was cotemporary with Webster, Calhoun, Van Buren, Benton, Berrien, Hayne and others of the great men of that day, and it is a singular coincidence that he died at about the same hour, and at nearly the same age, as Col. Benton, with whom he served for six years on the committee of military affairs, and between whom although differing politically, there always existed the closest personal friendship.

THE MILLERITES MOVING.—The Newark (N. J.) Advertiser says some of the leading Second Adventists in that city have again set a period for the destruction of the world, professing to have discovered the errors of their previous calculations, and to have finally ascertained the exact truth.—They regard the recent financial depression and the prevailing religious excitement as signs of the last day. By the next arrival from Europe they expect to hear of the destruction of the city of Rome, and this will portend the conflagration of the world next summer.
