The County Campaign.

The Executive Committee of the Democratic party of Oconee County recommend that the campaign in the county be opened by public meetings at the following times and places, to wit:

But when through the stained glass windows The sun throws blue and gold, I cannot help a thinking how The glory shone of old.

They call me an "old fossil," And a "relic of the past," A "foggy" and a "croaker" too; But this won't always last, I tread a trombling isthmus Where two seas of glory roll, And soon the past and future bliss Will swallow up the soul.

And when I reach fair Canaan, The Lord will doubtless see That mansions in the city will Not do for such as me; So He will let me go among The old-fashioned saints, I think, And praise Him 'neath the tree of life Upon the river's brink.

Two Paths.

An English lady, having been asked as to the propriety of attending on Sunday an exhibition of Bible pictures, replied with an illustration which illuminates a wide range of duties. She said:

Along the South Downs are two paths, one a very few inches from the edge of the cliff, another about two yards off. Many have walked and walked safely, along the first path, but it was dangerous.

One step to the left, and they would have fallen, perhaps, several hundred feet into the sea below; or, if a piece of loose rock suddenly separated from the other parts, it would have carried the person who chanced to be treading it, down, down with it, into the abyss.

Many, too, and I am among them, have trodden the path farther in; we had as pleasant a view, with this great distinction from the more dangerous loving passengers, we were safe; if we took a step to the left, we were still on solid ground; if the edge were jagged, or even a huge mass of rock fell, we only saw unevenness, or felt a slight shock.

A gust of wind could not hurl us over, neither would sudden giddiness send us rolling down the precipice.

Which was best, was wisest, was safest? "The last," you say? Yet both have been walked without accident.

I do not lay down a rule that every one would be doing wrong in going to see a collection of pictures illustrating the Bible on Sunday, but I do say there is a South Down called Sunday; it is high above the six miles of country around it; along the edge is written: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

There are two paths, one called "religious pleasure," the other, "hours for God alone. Which is the happiest, the wisest, the safest the best?"

Tom Blodgett, of St. Mary's, Collector of Customs notoriety, has turned up again. This time he is heard from in the region of Habersham and Rabun Counties, where he is passing himself off as a revenue agent. Blodgett, we learn, is at the head of about twenty-five men, which posse has seized quite a number of stills, and destroyed them with quantities of beer and mash.

Collector Clark says that he does not know why it is that Blodgett is officiating as a revenue agent, as he is not in the employ of the government, this fact having been learned by a telegram which he received from headquarters. Collector Clark was quite surprised when he heard that Blodgett was passing himself off as a revenue agent, and at once telegraphed to Washington, and was informed that Blodgett was not an employe of the government.

At the close of a lecture in English by Mr. Bradlaugh, who challenged any one present to reply to his argument, a poor, ignorant collier arose and said: "Maister Bradlaugh, me and my mate Jim were both Methodys till one of these infidel chaps oom' this way. Jim turned infidel, and used to badger me 'out attending prayer meetings; but one day in the pit a larg cob of coal came down upon Jim's head. Jim thought he was killed—and ah, mon! but he did holler and cry to God 'Then turning to Mr. Bradlaugh, with a knowing look he said: "Young man, there's nowt 'like cobs of coal for knocking infidelity out of a man!"

EXPECTING BAD NEWS.—A boy, apparently very much agitated, rushed into a house and said to the lady: "I don't want ter alarm yer, but I've got big news. The man sent me up from the livery stable to tell yer."

"Good heavens! What is it?" "Why, you know your little Aleck, what they can't keep outen the livery stable 'round the corner?"

"Yes, well?" "I told Aleck just now not to go inter the stable among the horses and he would not mind me."

"Oh dear! what has happened." "He said he wanted to see what a mule 'ud do when you tickled its heels with a straw."

"Oh heavens!" gasped the lady, and she clung to the mantel piece for a support.

"Well, sir, yer boy Aleck got a straw and snuck up behin' a sorrol mule, tickled him on the heels, an'—"

"The lady started for the door. "An' the blame critter never lifted a hoof?" called the boy; "never so much as switched his tail. It's a mighty good thing for Aleck that he didn't too, an' I thought I'd come up and tell yer."

A gentleman anxious to ascertain the effect of transplanting at night, instead of by day, made an experiment with the following results: He transplanted ten cherry trees while in bloom, commencing at four o'clock in the afternoon. Those transplanted in the dark maintained their condition fully. He did the same with ten dwarf trees, after the fruit was one-third grown. Those transplanted during the day shed their fruit; those transplanted during the night perfected the crop and showed no injury from having been removed. With each of these trees he removed some earth with the roots. The incident is fully vouched for, and if a few similar experiments produce a like result, it will be a strong argument to horticulturists, &c., to do such work at night.

Men work for it, beg for it, steal for it, and die for it, and all the while, from the cradle to the grave, nature and God are thundering in our ears the solemn question, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" The madness for money is the strongest and lowest of the passions; it is the insatiate Moloch of the human heart, before whose remorseless altar all the finer attributes of humanity are sacrificed. It makes merchandise of all that is sacred in the human affections, and even traffics in the awful solemnities of the eternal.

Reason and virtue alone can bestow liberty.

The last man to correct a mistake is—the man who commits it.

True merit, like a river, the deeper it is the less noise it makes.
