dog, as close to the wall as he could get, his body curled up into the smallest possible bunch to avoid the rain and possible observation. As the two men emerged from the door he looked up apprehensively to see if a kick or a stern "Be off with you, now!" would compel him to beat a rapid retreat. But nothing of the sort occurred. Mr. Roosevelt's expressive face took on a pitying and kindly look, and bending down, he stroked the animal's head and pulled him gently by the ears.

"Poor doggie, haven't you any master?" he inquired. Then he went back into the house, and the dog, with instinctive understanding of the situation, trotted close at his heels. The President ordered that the waif should be taken to the kitchen and given a good meal; and it is said that dog will be the dog of the White House during this admin-

Needed and very much needed! What? Your help, dear friend, in making provision for our big family. Two hundred children have bome to our sheltering roof. We are overwhelmed with necessities. There is not even one dollar in the treasury. We need clothing, food of every sort, specially flour, molasses, bacon, meal and all things of that kind. We need help at once! The dear little people do not know that the treasury is in such a plight. God and his people have always cared for them, so why should they fear? Trusting Him, they go for their daily bread, and they have never yet found it lacking. And they are not going to find you lacking, now! Friend, what you do, do quickly! It was a rainy, dreary day, soon after Mr. Roosevelt's return to Washington, and after a busy morning the President and his secretary started out for a walk. Just outside the door lay a homeless, friendless dog, as close to the wall as he could be a sign to this week he alludes to the mother of President Roosevelt, whose home was at Roswell, Ga., where Bill Arp was partly raised. In recalling the time when Roosevelt's mother was a girl, he speaks of neighboring families, and makes reference to the King boys, of whom there were nine, and 'only one sister for the whole crowd—a beautiful girl.' Miss King was one of the attendants at the wedding of Mrs. Roosevelt, the mother of the President. This beautiful girl was Miss Evaline King, who afterwards became Mrs. Dr. Raker, and who is the mother of Mrs. C. A. Simpson and Mrs. W. H. Irvine, of this city. ### A National Park in the South.

The advocates of the Appalachian Park have issued a pamphlet recording the progress made up to date and quoting a number of endorsements from leading men and papers given for this project. The arguments are all one way. The Department of Agriculture earnestly rectee recommended it, whoever looks into the matter sees its immediate importance. It is up to Congress to pass the bill. The magnificent forests of that region are being cut away, immeasurable damage is being done to the water supply, and if the land is not bought soon it will take 50 years to restore its trees and bring it back to its present condition. The natural beauty of the Appalachian district is beyond description. It is one of the most attractive sections of the world. The axe has only just begun to get in its work there.
