D. P. VERNER KILLS HIMSELF.
Master of Equity of Greenville County Ends His Life With Shotgun.

D. P. Verner, Master in Equity for Greenville county, committed suicide at his residence near Greenville at 7 o'clock yesterday morning, using a double-barrel shotgun. No one was present at the time. Mrs. Verner had left the room only a few moments before, and was in another part of the house when she heard the explosion. Hurrying to the room, she found Judge Verner's body lying on the bed with the weapon resting on the floor. The upper part of the skull had been torn away and death is supposed to have been instantaneous.

For several months Judge Verner had been in failing health, and it is thought that in a fit of depression, caused by his physical condition, he determined to take his own life. No note, or anything explaining any desire to commit suicide, has been found. When Mrs. Verner left the room she had closed the blinds, hoping that Mr. Verner would be able to sleep until later in the morning, as he had been suffering of late with insomnia. He was apparently resting quietly. The gun, which Judge Verner used to take his own life, was resting in a corner of the room, where it had stood without having been discharged for many years. From the way the shot took effect, it is supposed that he got up, took the gun from its place, and seating himself on the edge of the bed, placed the gun between his feet with the muzzle against the forehead, and pulled the trigger.

Judge Verner spent Tuesday in the city and at his office, as was his custom. Though unwell he seemed to be no worse than usual, and the announcement of his death yesterday morning was a shock to his numerous friends and acquaintances throughout the city.

David Petrigra Verner was a native of Oconee county, but removed to this city more than twenty years ago. Here he began the practice of law and in 1887 became Master in Equity of Greenville county, which office he held until his death.

He was regarded as one of the best office lawyers in this part of the State. During the seventeen years that he disposed of the duties of Master, hundreds of cases passed through his office. His legal opinions were strong, vigorous and accurate. Rarely did the higher courts reverse his findings of fact and law. In speaking of him yesterday, one of the lawyers at this bar said that Judge Verner never failed to show a great deal of study and learning in his decisions, but more than that he displayed much that was good common sense.

He was generally admired by all who knew him, and all of his acquaintances were his friends. He was at all times a dignified, courteous gentleman, ever respectful of the feelings of others. These admirable qualities, and his splendid ability, gave him such a hold on the people of the community that he never met with opposition for the office of Master.

The Verner family has been prominent for many years. J. S. Verner, Master in Equity for Richland county, is a brother of the late Judge Verner, and Rev. Phillips Verner, a noted missionary of Africa, is a nephew. Judge Verner leaves surviving him, his wife and two daughters, Mrs. Reuben Moorman, of Jacksonville, Fla., and Miss Emily Verner, of Columbia, there are four surviving brothers: Robert S. Verner, of Oconee; Luke W. Verner, of Seneca; Charles Verner, of Alabama; and Ebenezer E. Verner, of Oconee county, and several married sisters. His mother, Mrs. Emily Verner, also survives, and two aunts, Mrs. Sue Hawthorne and Mrs. A. P. Farr, of this city. Judge Verner was not quite fifty years of age.

Coroner Black came to the city yesterday for the purpose of holding an inquest, but after investigation he decided that this would not be necessary.

There is a large family connection here, and numerous relatives arrived in the city yesterday afternoon for the funeral.—Greenville News, August 5th.

A Pretty Home Wedding.

Another one of Anderson's fair daughters was married on Tuesday morning at nine o'clock, when Miss Lucia Cater became the wife of Dr. W. Frank Ashmore. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. S. E. Cater. The marriage took place at the home of the bride on Greenville street. Owing to the recent bereavement of the family only a few relatives and friends were present. Decorations consisted only of a few choice roses, arranged throughout the house in tall vases, which added much to the sweet simplicity of this occasion. The bride entered the parlor on the arm of the groom and then the impressive marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. S. J. Cartledge, of the First Presbyterian church. The bride wore a lovely toilette of white mill, daintily trimmed in lace and ribbons. Dr. and Mrs. Ashmore left on the 10 o'clock train to visit the groom's parents in Greenville. The bride's going away gown was an elegant black and white silk shirt waist suit, with hat to match. The many useful and handsome presents testified to the popularity of this young couple. Mrs. Ashmore, as Miss Lucia Cater, was one of the most attractive and lovable young ladies of the city. Dr. Ashmore has only been living here a short time, but has made many friends and promises to be most successful as a physician.—Anderson Mail, August 3.

EDINBURGH'S ATMOSPHERE.

THE POLITICAL AND LITERARY CAPITAL OF SCOTLAND.

CITY OF GLORIOUS TRADITIONS.

Great Bridge—St. Walter Scott's Monument. Edinburgh Castle—Haystack Palace, Home of John Knox.

[Correspondence Keowee Courier.]

Liverpool, England, July 1.—As Glasgow is the commercial capital of Scotland, so Edinburgh is the literary capital; and it is also the real capital. It is very different from Glasgow. As we rode over the city we had a fine opportunity to see the beauty of the place. Glasgow resembles one of our bustling and hustling cities of America; but in Edinburgh you can almost feel the influence of the literary and classical atmosphere, with its clean and beautiful streets. All of Edinburgh, however, is not thus, for the old part of the town has a dirty and poverty-stricken appearance. But taken together the city makes a pleasant impression on one's mind.

Here are many schools of learning and here many great and able men have lived. From this fountain of learning many streams of influence have gone out into all the world. Here is the great university which has thousands of students, and there are other institutions of learning of less note. This city is located on the Forth river and has about 300,000 inhabitants. As we entered Edinburgh we crossed over the Forth river on the magnificent bridge which spans the river and which is such a splendid and enduring monument to the mechanical and engineering skill of man. This is one of the great bridges of the world and was erected at a cost of nearly four and a half million dollars and was opened to traffic in 1897.

There are so many things of interest in this city that it is difficult to know what to say and what not to say in a letter like this, for only a small portion can be covered. One feels like he is overwhelmed and submerged in the stream of history in Edinburgh. So many prominent personages have lived here and so many events of a critical character have occurred here, that we who have been here for the first time feel like we are living in the past, in the midst of the crises in human history. We are stopping at the Royal Hotel, one of the best in the city.

By the way, the hotel accommodations in this country are superb—the service is extraordinary and the fare as good as one should want. But there is one abominable custom over this way, which is a constant menace to one, the resource of which is the miserable custom of tipping those who wait on you. You know what it costs to get into a hotel or a place like this, but you don't know what it is going to cost you to get out. It is even worse, they say, over on the continent. I have been told that waiters in some of the big hotels over there will give large sums of their position. This business of tipping begins on the steamer which brings you over the ocean and it doesn't stop till you get back to America.

Our hotel is on Princess street, one of the most important streets in the city. The ground opposite our hotel and for some distance on the other side has no houses on it, but is taken up with beautiful and exquisite flower gardens. On this ground is the commanding monument to Sir Walter Scott, one of the handsomest in the world. This monument is 200 feet in height and was erected at a cost of about $75,000. It is a cruciform Gothic spire, supported on four grand Early English arches, which serve as a canopy to the splendid marble statue of Sir Walter. We can see from our hotel the great castle on a commanding eminence of rock where it lifts from grassy slopes its weather-stained towers and fortifications.

The summit of this great castle is about 335 feet above the level of the sea and furnishes probably the most commanding and magnificent view in all the city. It is next to Holyrood Palace as a place of historic interest to strangers. It would take almost a week to do this castle thoroughly and it would take a little book to write it up. We went over the most interesting portions of the castle, and this, of course, had to be hastily done. Queen Mary's little room is an interesting one. In this circumscribed compartment James I of England was born, under whose reign England and Scotland were united, and whose name is so intimately connected with our common, or authorized version, of the Bible, as it is called. This room is very small and is singularly irregular. It has undergone very few changes since James made his advent into the world on June 19, 1566. Queen Margaret's chapel is also a place of great interest on account of its size and age—it is considered the smallest and oldest chapel in Scotland—its size is 103 feet by 30 feet and Queen

Margaret, who built it, died in 1693. So the chapel was built over 800 years ago. As one goes into the buildings which are hoary with age, he feels like America is an infant. Of course, all of these buildings are made of rock, and no doubt will be intact a thousand years hence, if the world stands that long. We also went into the Royal Palace in the castle, the stronghold of the kings and queens of Scotland for centuries. The Crown Room in this palace contains the ancient regalia of Scotland, consisting of crown, scepter and sword of State. The crown is supposed to be as old as the days of Bruce and the last king crowned with it was Charles II. The royal jewels in this room are very handsome and, of course, valuable. This will have to suffice for the castle.

Now, a word about Holyrood, a place of surpassing and thrilling interest. The palace here was founded by James IV in 1501. The picture gallery in this palace contains 100 imaginary pictures of both fabulous and reputed rulers of Scotland and other pictures which elicit one's attention. There are some attractive paintings in the rooms occupied by Lord Darnley, Queen Mary's apartments, which are on the third floor of James V's Tower, form probably the most interesting portion of the palace buildings. Here this noted queen spent the most eventful years of her unhappy life. We must simply mention the audience-chamber, the bed-chamber and the dressing-room. A word about the private staircase and supper-room. A small door on the north side opens on the private staircase. It was through this that the assassins of Rizzio ascended to the royal apartments. On the night of March 9, 1566, the unfortunate Rizzio was dragged from behind the Queen, to whose garments he clung for protection. He was hurried through the bed-room and ante-chamber and at the head of the staircase he was put to death by the daggers of the Earl of Morton, Lord Ruthven and "divers other gentlemen." There is a little bronze slab in the floor which marks the place where Rizzio was put to death. Those were indeed stirring times. The Chapel Royal is the only portion which remains of the ancient Abbey of Holyrood, founded by King David in 1128, nearly 800 years ago. This old chapel has had a wonderful history. It was dilapidated by Edward II in 1322 and was burned (all that would burn) by Richard III in 1385. It was restored by Abbott Crawford near the end of the 15th century, and was again sacked by the English in 1547. The portion that now remains to tell the thrilling tale of the ancient building.

The main building is a quadrangular edifice, 358 by 255 feet, magnificent in its appointments and imposing in its size. The library contains more than 140,000 printed volumes and 2,000 volumes of manuscript. This university has four main departments, theology, law, medicine and art, and has for a long time sustained a world-wide reputation as a seat of profound learning, drawing students from all parts of the civilized world.

I visited the house in which John Knox lived from 1559 to 1572, the year of his death. In this house the great reformer, the gigantic defender of the faith and the pioneer of human freedom, wrote much, if not all of his history of the Reformation. In this house he narrowly escaped the assassin's bullet which struck the candlestick while he was sitting in meditation. This house is said now to be the oldest residence house in Edinburgh. It belongs to the United Free church of Scotland, and is kept open to visitors, who have to pay a small admission fee to enter. I also visited the spot where Knox was buried, near St. Giles church. There is a street over the place now, paved with granite, and the only thing to mark the place is the following: J. K. 1572, on the granite stone. Here lie the remains of this great and truly good man, concerning whom Regent Morton said in his eulogium: "There lieth a man who never feared the face of man." I understand that a fitting monument is soon to be erected in Edinburgh to this man who made Scotland and much of the best in other lands. There is a magnificent monument to him in Glasgow in the cemetery by the cathedral. People are now fulfilling the prophecy uttered by Knox himself: "What I have been to my country, although this unthankful age will not know, yet ages to come will be compelled to bear witness to the truth."

The church of St. Giles, which belongs to the Established (Presbyterian) church of Scotland, is a place of thrilling interest and so is the Greyfriars church, and I wish I could say something on these places, but time, or rather the lack of it, prevents. I attended two services held in the former church.

I passed by the church of St. Andrews, from which Thos. Chalmers and those who followed him went out of the Established church in 1843, as far as they knew, facing war and poverty, and inspiring people everywhere since with their noble stand for principle and truth as they saw it.

I spent a Sunday in Edinburgh, an ideal place to spend the Lord's day in. There was a quietness and rest in the very atmosphere that could almost be felt. I attended two services in St. George's church on this day, where large congregations assembled. These services were delightful and helpful. The Lord's day is not obsolete in Scotland. One of the guide books on our steamer paid a very high tribute to Scotland, when it said, in making your plans to go through Scotland, you had better consider Sunday as a non die.

But I must close this letter. I am now in Liverpool enjoying the hospitality of this great business center, in attendance upon the Pan-Presbyterian Council. W. G. Neville.

The Kind You Have Always Bought Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Hitchcock Jealous Lover Shoots.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., August 4.—Two shadows on a window curtain seen by a jealous lover outside were followed by five shots and the groans of two wounded persons at 1 o'clock this morning at Georgetown, near here. At this time Mrs. Ellen Dembiek was talking to her sister at the window. He is George Smith and had just returned from this city, where he was shopping. As they stood, their forms were clearly silhouetted on the curtain. The police say that Steve Wisnoskie, whom they have under arrest, was known to be jealous of Smith's attentions to Mrs. Dembiek, and that he had sworn to have revenge. Mr. Dembiek was shot in the thigh and escaped with a bullet through his leg and will recover.

Thomas McCordell, a negro, was killed on July 29th, by his wife, Ella McCordell, on Henry Calp's plantation, west of Lancaster. It seems that McCordell left home some time during the night, not returning until after daylight. In the meantime his wife also left the house, going to a neighbor's nearby, where she was found by her husband. He began cursing her for "staying out all night," and drawing his razor, made a lick at her throat, inflicting a slight wound. The woman seized an axe, and striking her husband on the head, killed him. She went into town at once and surrendered to the sheriff.

Section Director Bauer, when asked about the blight on cotton as reported in the Greenville News, said that it was probably a sort of fungus growth which is a kind of blight. There has been little so far in this State, except in the Island districts several years ago, and when it was found that it was contagious it was killed out by letting the ground alone for a few seasons. While he had not received enough information about it to speak authoritatively he did not think it would do much damage now that the crop was so far advanced.
