Do you know my secret, dear? Surely you must know it! Listen now and you will hear All the blithe winds blow it! Blow it in a merry tune

Through the leafy bower of June, Where the lilies listen: Ah, your sweet eyes glisten
'Neath the golden voil of noon—
Surely you do know it! Do you guess my secret, dear?

Surely you can guess it!

Low, bend low, and you shall hear

All the flowers confess it!

Telling it to the nodding sheaves,

Telling it to little leaves Where the song birds hover; Ah, your cheeks you cover Where the blush a bright spell weaves

Surely you can guess it! May I bring the secret, dear ?
Surely I may bring it
To your heart, for even now

All the bright birds sing it. Sing it up and down the way, Dropping it, at close of day, Where your foot-steps linger; Hark ! each little singer Trills his very heart away—

Surely I may bring it! Shall I tell the secret, dear? Surely I may tell it! Yet, nor gold nor precious stones Ever should compel! Crickets pipe it in the grass, Bees will hum it as you pass Through the dew-lit beather; All sweet winds together

Breathe it to my little lass—
