[For the Sumter Watchman.] Mr. Editor: In common with all others interested in the prosperity of our little Town, I was much pleased to see you calling attention, in your last issue, to an evil that threatens seriously the trade and business of this place. We cannot pay the heavy freights now charged to Best Scotch and from this point, and compete successfully with our more favored neighbors. Just after and since the close of the war, our merchants, despite the Wild Cherry Brandy high tariffs of freight then in existence, by their energy liberality and fair dealing, built up a business for Sumter surpassed perhaps but by two cities in the Self-Sealing Jars, State, the benefit of which she is still enjoying. But as other Railroads have been extended and other points put in communication with the coast at less cost than that we have to bear, trade naturally taking the channel with the least impediments will give us the go-by, and pour its benefits into the laps of our enterprising neighbors. Under these circumstances, Ma. Editor, it becomes us not only to write about it, and talk plainly that they can but see that a
