

thing before my eyes, because I am positively sure that—
"Post mortem nihil est, spangne more nihil."
"GASTON FERRET."
This letter, together with a sealed one, were taken from his pocket by Captain Cain, the Chief of Police. The sealed letter was addressed to Mons. Arthur Malasague, and has not been broken open. It is not known, therefore, what it contains.
The scene now had become almost frightful. The man lay upon his back breathing heavily, and a sanguine tide issuing from his mouth. The ball in its course through his head had bulged out his eyes, rendering his face black, blackened by the congealing blood, while over the pale lips had settled a bloody, frothy foam.
The stout men turned away from the scene sick at heart. He was evidently an educated man, and was employed as clerk in a confectionery on the corner of Bayou road and Esplanade street.
The young girl, Maggie Walker, has only been in the city about two years, and came from Franklin parish, where her parents now reside. The girl is about twenty-five years of age, is rather fleshy, and is somewhat pretty, with black eyes and dark brown curling hair.—New Orleans Picayune.

Monsieur Kaintuck & the Fiddler.—On board the steamer Indiana, in one of her trips down the Mississippi, were a large number of good-natured passengers. They were seeking to while away the hours, according to their several notions of pleasure, and would have got on very well but for one annoyance. That happened to be on board, a Hoosier from the Wabash, who was going "down to Orleans," and he had provided himself with an old violin, fancying that he could fiddle as well as the best man, and planting himself where he could attract notice, scraped away. The fellow couldn't fiddle any more than a setting hen, and the horrible noise disturbed his fellow passengers excessively. A Frenchman, of very delicate nerves, and a very fine musical ear, was especially annoyed. He fluttered, fidgetted and swore at the "sacred" fiddle. The passengers tried various expedients to rid themselves of the Hoosier and his fiddle, it was no go—"he would music just as long as he d-d pleased." At last, a big Kentuckian sprang from his seat, saying, "I reckon I'll fix him." Placed himself near the amateur fiddler, and commenced braying with all his might. The effect of the move was beyond description. "Old Kentuck" brayed so loud that he drowned the screeching of the fiddle, and amid the shouts of the passengers, the discomfited Hoosier retreated below, leaving the victory of the unequal contest with the Kentuckian and his singular and impromptu imitation of Belem's friend. The delight of the Frenchman knew no bounds; quiet was restored for the day. During the night the Kentuckian left the boat. The next morning, after breakfast, the passengers were startled by the discordant sound of their old tormentor; Hoosier had discovered that the coat was clear, and was bound to revenge himself on the passengers. Loud, and worse than ever screeamed the fiddle. The Frenchman, just seated to read his paper, on the first sound, rose, looked anxiously around shrugging his shoulders, and then cried, "Vare is hel vare is he? Queeck—queeck, Mon Dieu! Vare is Monsieur Kentuck, de man vot plays on de juckass."

A Jersey Heroine.—The New York Tribune relates the following thrilling incident of the heroism of a Jersey girl: "Yesterday afternoon a young lady of eighteen, while proceeding along the Morris and Essex railroad track, between Orange and Orange Junction, saw a gentleman who was walking a few paces ahead of her stagger and fall. At the same time she saw the down express for New York approaching. The unfortunate man fell on the line by which the train was coming, and his destruction appeared inevitable. The courageous girl with all speed ran to the prostrate man, and by great exertion succeeded in rolling him off the track, not before the locomotive had passed and cut off a portion of her dress. The driver brought his engine to a stop immediately, and a doctor descended from the train and found that the unconscious man was suffering from an epileptic attack. The passengers loudly cheered the heroic action. On recovering consciousness the gentleman who had so nearly lost his life expressed the deepest gratitude. The young lady persistently refused to give her name, when some New York merchants mentioned their desire of presenting her with a testimonial. Amid denfencing cheering and the waving of pocket-handkerchiefs the train pursued its way to New York.

"Mammy!" said a precocious little boy who, against his will, was made to rock the cradle of his baby brother, "If the Lord has any more babies to give away don't you take 'em."

PLANTATION BITTERS
This wonderful vegetable restorative is the sheet-anchor of the feeble and debilitated. As a tonic and cordial for the aged and languid it has no equal among stomachics. As a remedy for the nervous weakness to which women are especially subject, it is superseding every other stimulant. In all climates, tropical, temperate or frigid, it acts as a specific in every species of disorder which undermines the bodily strength and breaks down the animal spirits.
Wherever it is introduced it becomes a standard article—a medicinal staple. It is to-day the best and purest tonic, and the most popular medicine in the civilized world—be sure and get the genuine. Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Country Stores.
