Deep in a wine vault sit I here. Upon a cask of Sherry, And order in the best of cheer, And feel exceeding merry. The butler at my elbow stands. tol As I sit winking, blinking, And fills and fills at my command, And I keep drinking, drinking!

The demon, Thirst, who plagues me sore I strive in vain to banish: I quaff a glass—a dozen more— Jove! see the red wine vanish. The whole world seems to me just now In rosy colors sinking; I would not harm a single soul, I'm only drinking, drinking!

But still my thirst with every glass Grows fiercer yet and stronger; Tis ever thus with wine, alas! Till one can drink no longer.

Yet tell me, prithee, where's the wrong. As to the floor I'm sinking-I have not harmed a single soul, I'm only drinking, drinking! AUGUSTUS B. KNOWLTON.
