BY "KAGIN."

Across from my window, over the street, Lives a little maiden pretty and neat; And oft at my window, feeling sad, I watch for her coming to make me glad.

And it makes me happy to see her face, And her dear little form of artless grace ; To hear the bright tones of her girlish voice, That come to my heart to bid it rejoice.

Each morn from my window, across the street,

I see the gay party of school-girls meet; And the dearest and brightest of the party

Is my little maiden over the way.

And sometimes I fancy, sitting up there, She looks at my window to bid me cheer; And I do feel cheered as she trips away, Cheered and ready to go through the day.

God made the bright flowers and birds with their song

To bless and to brighten our pathway along "She comes to bless me," sometimes I say, My dear little maiden over the way.

"A thing of beauty's forever a joy" And often I think that again I'm a boy With the bright romance of that sunny day When I think of my maiden over the way.

She's memory's angel that carries me back, Through the dark vistas of life's dreary track: Takes me back, in my thought to a time and a place, When life was all brightness like her little

Sometimes at evening, coming down street, Returning from school, the party I meet; Those bright little maidens, freed from the rule. Of discipline tiresome, books and their school.

I hear that they're going to send her from home. How I shall miss her! My thoughts, they will roam To her bright presence, and in fancy I'll see,

Her smile cheering others as it used to cheer

Yes, I shall miss her; but God wills it so, I know that He'll bless her wherever she go. She may go, but, enshrined in my heart, Is the thought of her brightness that will not - depart.

The charm of her young life happy and bright,

Like a star on my sad heart ever shall light. That always she may be thus happy, I'll pray, My dear little maiden over the way. ORANGEBURG, Jan. 16th, 1870.

How PEOPLE WALK .-- Observing persons move slowly; their heads move alternately from side to side, while they occasionally stop and turn around.
