The Rebel Scout.

The sun's at rest and swilight grey, Steals softly from afar; Night gently folds her sable wing, To greet the evening star.

Sweet Luna comes from 'neath the wave, Her silvery rays to shed, And looks down on the weary earth; From out her other bed.

At this lone hour a little boat Moves gently to the shore : Into it leaps a maiden fair, Her lover plies the our.

And now soft strains of music flost, As down the stream they row; light guitar the maiden holds, That breathes sweet notes of love.

The one-a noble scout is he, His suit, Confederate gray, d gfaseru! fitm of stately mien. In war's own proud array. And she, the fairest of the land.

Dest Carolina's pride-Has premised ere another sun, To be young Charlie's bride. Yes, that fond heart is all his own,

He clasps her willing hand, Round her fair form one arm entwines-The boat floats for the land. .. But do they see those threatening clouds,

That hover o'er love's Bark ? Ah! no, life 's but a fairy dream And sweetly sings the lark." ..

The tempest's war is wildly loud; Dark gathering shadows come; And linger Hear that happy bearts, In shrould of midnight gloom.

He pressed a kiss upon the cheek

Of her he loved so well.

All vain he tried, as yn he dashed, 1916 rising theligher to fitell.

The camp-fires burning bright; The bugle, too, now rounds to horse, To battle for the rate. The frowning guns of death,

Now onward rode with shouts of theer, When victory claimed her wreath. "Our Charlie's fallen!" eries the tries Of many a comrade now,

As they stand near his bleeding form, With serrow's lowering brow. From many a flushing eye,

At vengeance madly shricks aloud,

With wild and threatening cry. The day is won, but Charlie lies, Upon the battle plain, His effent heart can ne'er more threb

TRUE LUVELINESS.

Site who thinks a noble heart Better than a noble mien. Henors virtue more than art, Though 'tis less in fashich seen; Whatsoe'er her formune be. She's the bride-the Wife-for me.

She who deems that inward grace Far surpasses outward show ; She who values less the face Than that charm' the soul can show Whatsoe'er her fortune be, She's the bride-the wife-for me She who knows the heart stimires

Something more than the lips of dew, That when love's brief rose expires, Love itself dies with it too-Whatsoe'er her fortune be. She's the bride - the wife for me.

A Sailor's Love.

One little act of politoness will someferment .- The tfollowing sketch illustrates this fact :

A sailor, roughly garbed, was stroll. perhaps, the greater part of his prospering through the streets of New Orleans, ity to his tact and politeness in crossing then in a rather damp condition from recent ram and the rise of the tide.

Tuening the corner of a much , frequented and narrow alley, he observed a young lady standing in perplexity, apparently measuring the depth of the muddy water between her and the opposite s. ewater between her and the opposite steemarried female acquaintances, ventures walk with no very satisfied countenance.

The sailor paused, for he was a great tempt to indicate the real reasons which sdmirer of beauty, and certainly the fair face that peeped out from under the little chip hat, and the auburn curls hanging glossy and and unconfined over her muslin dress, might tempt a curious or an admiring glance.-Perplexed the lady put forth one little foot, when the gallant sailor, with impulsiveness, exclaimed : That protty foot, lady, should not be soiled with the filth of this lane; wait for a moment only, and and I will make you a path."

So springing past her into a carpenter's shop opposite, he bargained for a plank board that stood in the doorway, and coming back to the smiling girl who was just coquetish enough to accept the services of the handsome yout!! sailor he bridged the narrow black stream, and she tripped across with a merry Thank you, and a roguish smile, mak- goir g out by the day to work. ing her eyes as dansling as they could
