

Years After.

To night a child with earnest eyes
Climbed up upon my knee;
And looking in her face I saw
What no one else could see.

I saw an orchard path, o'erhung
With blossoms pink and sweet,
And dew, like diamond drops upon
The clover at our feet.

I saw a maiden, sunny haired,
With lips of saucy grace,
And just such eyes as looked in mine
From out the child's pure face.

I heard the cricket chirp, and call
Its mate among the grass,
And saw the moonlight o'er all,
And heard the breezes pass.

A voice awoke me from the spell—
A voice I used to know,
Yet not the same sweet voice of old—
So tender and so low.]

I lifted up my dreamful eyes
Half thinking I should see
The same sweet face, whose girlish grace
Was very dear to me.

I saw—oh, not the face I knew
So long and long ago,
But, looking through it, I could see
The face I used to know!

The years had wrought their changes there,
And in her heart I knew,
Were changes greater, for she vowed
To love me, and be true.

Ah, well! The world is false at best.
Is cold and full of chance,
And hearts that promise much to day,
To-morrow may estrange.

This woman with her wordly face,
Was nothing now to me.
But looking in its snowy grace,
I thought what used to be!

ONE THOUSAND

SOLDIERS may be stationed here to guard the lives of the "truly loil," but that will not permit me from selling all kinds of GROCERIES and LIQUORS at figures to suit the miser that would sell his soul for two dollars.

BLUE COATS

MAY come among us, but I'll guarantee as soon as they make one purchase at my CHEAP STORE on the East Corner of Meroney's Lot,

IN ORANGEBURG VILLAGE

That they will ground their arms. I have such articles as Flour, Sugar, Coffee, Lard, Butter, Bacon, Hams, Mackerel, Cheese, Rice, &c., of the finest kinds. And as to my LIQUORS—why their flavor alone would entice the veriest old hand-shell to try a "drop."
My Segars are such as President Grant orders whenever his mind becomes disturbed over Southern outrages. They bring quiet all the time. In a word, I have a STOCK of Groceries, Liquors, Segars and Tobacco that have astonished the natives. Let one and all give me a call, at my NEW STORE on Meroney's Lot, where that indefatigable gentleman himself, and Johnny (his big boy) will be found at all times ready to give GOOD BARGAINS. And as for me, why—well, the boys know how it is themselves.
