LETTER FROM MINNESOTA. St. Paul, February 22, 1873.

I have gradually approached the north pole until I have got as near to it as a reasonable man might wish. I feel the cold wind from the eternal icebergs of the north every time I venture ten feet from the fire-side. To-day the thermometer marks twenty-eight degrees below zero, which is an intensity of cold that you in the genial clime of South Carolina can not realize. In going from my hotel this morning, (a less distance than from the En-QUIRER office to the depôt) I had to stop and warm at stores along the street four times. My nose and ears ached with the bitter cold, and my fingers were benumbed. It is the wind that makes the cold so intense. Twenty-eight degrees below zero, with a strong wind, such as has been blowing to-day, is worse than for- give bonds before entering into office. ty-five degrees below zero and the atmosphere

In the great storm of last month, nearly two hundred people were frozen to death, yet the thermometer did not sink to thirty degrees below zero until after the storm was over. It was the fearful, blinding wind and snow that did the work. Men perished within fifty feet of houses, not being able to see ten feet from them. The most heart-rending stories reach my ears of the suffering by of the General Assembly, and for other purthe storm. Of over one hundred instances of terrible torture, perhaps that of Mr. Evans, of Fillmore county, is the saddest. He was a minister, and had been away to preach, taking his family with him. On his return in his sleigh the storm overtook him when within less than a mile of home. He had with him his wife, little boy and babe. His horse became blinded by the storm, and finally stopped in a snow drift, unable to go any further. Mr. Evans took his little boy in his arms and pushed through the terrible drifts and blinding snow for home. He found it, and left his little boy to return to the sleigh, taking some blankets with him. These he wrapped around his frail wife, and, taking the babe in his arms, started for home. Poor man, he never found it! The home he found is above, and was reached through icy portals. In the blinding, driving, pelting snow and fearful cold he lost his way, and perished with his tender little babe folded to his breast. Who can picture thirty days after receiving official notification the agony of this poor man as he floundered in the bewildering drifts, completely lost, but knowing that his wife was freezing in the sleigh alone, that his child was at home dying alone, and he unable to reach either of them. or save the babe in his arms? Could death, in any form, be more cruel? None but God above knows how long he struggled in the blinding blast before he yielded to the fury of the storm. All we do know is, that father, mother, child and babe perished. When the neighbors called at the house after the abatement of the storm, it had but a solitary little frozen occupant. The poor child had died alone-died in pain and grief, for the icy tears were upon its little cheek. The wife and mother was found in the sleigh, a stiffened corpse. The dead father, with the dead babe upon his breast, was a mile away, where he had sunk down frozen, exhausted and lost in the driving snow.

Another sad case was that of a young man who was just returning from Canada with his bride. His father went out to meet them, and the happy trio were driving home in a sleigh, unconscious of danger. Suddenly the storm burst upon them. The team could not keep the road and finally it was lost. To find it again was the only hope, and father and son left the sleigh to find the road. They never returned. They became lost themselves, and wandered, nobody knows where, only their dead bodies were found a mile and a half out upon the bleak prairie. The lady became anxious for their safety and left the ny in New York, Mr. W. C. Oastler. It was sleigh to try and find them. She became lost written by Mr. G. W. Dick, of Ross, Ohio: herself, and was found two days after under the shelter of a pile of logs, but frozen so badly that both lower limbs have been amputated below the knee. Poor girl! the cruel storm has left her upon the shore, a wreck, the macadamized road we draw from Hamilcrippled and desolate.
