MACADAM ROADS.

The System by Which the Highways of York Can be Transformed.

There are 110,579 acres devoted to to Old John Macadam was one of the greatest benefactors the farmers of England ever had. He found the highways of Great Britain in a bad condition, and spent the best in England, but throughout a part of the continent of Europe.

The Constitution presents below a description of the Macadam system, as he has seen idle it in operation in England, and it will be seen, from what he says, that good and per- ders. manent roads may be made at moderate cost. Macadam demonstrated long ago that by his system roads can be made both cheaply and well, if his instructions be carried out as they should be, and perhaps we could not do dled officer in command of the gun had not better than to quote them here. He says: "For the foundation of a road it is not necessary to lay a substratum of large stones, pavement, etc., as it is a matter of indifference whether the substratum be hard or soft; and The metal for roads must consist of broken stones (granite, flint or whinstone is by far the best); these must in no case exceed six ounces each in weight, and stones of from one ounce to two ounces are all to be preferloosened and removed to the side, where they are to be broken into pieces of the regulation weight; and the road is then to be smooththen to be carefully spread over it, and as depth, but to be scattered in shovelful after shovelful till a depth of from six to ten inches, according to the quality of the road, has been obtained. The road is to have a fall, from the middle to the sides, of about one foot in sixty feet, and ditches are to be dug

Now, Macadam whose system has superseded nearly every other in this and continental countries, speaks of ordinary country roads calculated to sustain heavy traffic and the greatest depth of metal recommended is ten inches. For carriage drives and park tions here be followed out particularly as regards leveling the bottom of the road and ry to dig out the road deeply, nor to remove much more than the turf, in fact; this run off. Macadam's object was not to allow the water to drain through amongst the stones and settle in the bottom to make a puddle of the soft soil beneath, but to make a hard and impermeable crust that would throw the water off at the sides. More depends, it may be said, upon the making of the road than upon the quantity of material used, and the most essential points are a level and well-settled bottom and bogs, and they stood, and we have seen car-Do not mark out the rows too deep.
