In fact, the roads have been bringing their freight a distance of hundreds of miles at less than would be charged for the same freight delivered at many towns along the line a much shorter distance from the starting point. The court says this is unjust disination, and that all freight charges should be on the same basis at so much a mile. If the decision is sustained, the result will be that the smaller towns can no longer to prison without bail, and is in danger of be taxed for the benefit of the large cities.

There are actually two in Florida, and usually one to three in Illinois, and the same number in New York. One is known in Texas, two in Idaho, two in Pensylvania and four in South Carolina. There are probably more than three score lepers in Louisiana and less than half that in the States of the Northwest. This suggested an approximate estimate of between 75 and 100 cases of leprosy, but competent observers have estimated that the total number is between 90 and 150. Enough lepers are now sheltered upon the soil to offer a menace to the welfare of its inhabitants and to propose a problem in State and sanitary science which I believe the general government alone can rightly solve.
