

L. M. GRIST & SONS, Publishers.

A Samily Newspaper: For the Promotion of the Political, Social, Agricultural and Commencial Interests of the South.

ESTABLISHED 1855.

YORKVILLE, S. C., SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1898.

men on the villain that's doin this!"

heart of a man. The old man held a lantern, the light of which was shed

For some time that face had been white and cold, but now the blue lips had turned to a delicate pink, and the

All Catherine's courage seemed to Gently and tenderly he led her back

BLANCO KEEPS ORDER.

have failed her. She dropped her head,

"Take me home."

upon Catherine's face.

SINGLE COPY, FIVE CENTS. NUMBER 71.

General Blanco has declared to sev-

TERMS $2.00 A YEAR IN ADVANCE.

CAPTURE. MARRIAGE BY

the flame.

spoke out.

smiling.

usual?'

dances.

exclaimed Catherine.

ing crimson and scowling.

gan.

At last one day when they were rid-

"I've been thinking, Kate," he be-

"Indeed, cousin?" said Catherine,

"I've been thinking that this sort of last night and only gave me two square

"Mr. Langford waltzes beautifully,"

"Isn't that something un-ing side by side through the woods he

BY ROBERT BUCHANAN,

Author of "The Shadow of the Sword," "God and the Man," Etc.

Copyright, 1897, by Robert Buchanan. CHAPTER IV.

Young Patrick Blake, known to his had many rivals, some young like himintimate acquaintances as "the squir- self, others of maturer age and ampler een," had neither house nor lands, though he belonged by right of birth to the all. The man he thought most an old county family. In spite of his dangerous was Philip Langford, who poverty he had great expectations, for was certainly a great favorite with his his uncle, Sir William Craig of Craig cousin. castle, had no issue, and young Patrick was the next of kin. The property, however, was not entailed, and it was entirely in Sir William's discretion how it should be disposed of.

During his uncle's lifetime Patrick paid assiduous court to the old man and received in return a modest allowance, which he dissipated freely among his companions. From childhood upward he had been a black sheep, caring little for decent society and spending his time in the company of his inferiors, but he was a daring rider, a good shot, and he could tie a fly or play a salmon with any man in Mayo. His escapades, which would have shocked most people, only amused Sir William.

"Pat is a wild young devil," he would say to his wife, "but so was I myself at his age. Some day he'll marry and sober down."

Before the young man could do either the old gentleman died, leaving everything he possessed to his wife except a miserable £100 a year, which was assigned to his "beloved nephew," Patrick Blake.

Young Patrick cursed and raged for a time, but he had sense enough left to transfer his court to the widow, whom he invariably described as "the old woman." He went with her to church (she was a Protestant), carried her prayer book and posed as a young saint, only escaping from time to time to more congenial society, in which he could drink and swear comfortably and curse his bad luck.

Things were going on very well from his point of view-that is, the old lady was in very delicate health and likely to follow her lord and master, after having made a will in her nephew's favor-when a serious scandal, in which a young peasant girl was concerned, opened Lady Craig's eyes to the true character of her scapegrace nephew. She held her tongue, altered her will and died peaceably, leaving the castle and the estates to a niece of her own, Miss Catherine Power.

When the will was read, young Patrick used language which is not generally popular in polite circles, cursed "the old woman," and expressed a hope that she was enjoying a warmer climate, and, riding off to John Carey's inn, remained for a whole fortnight there in a state of savage drunkenness. In the meantime Miss Power arrived and took up her residence at the castle, and she had hardly been 24 hours there when the story of the dispossessed heir was related to her. It aroused all her womanly pity, and her immediate thought was, "How can I make amends?'

in the same manner, and the breach seemed entirely healed. A few days later, as they stood to- men are only half civilized! Pray, take gether one morning in front of the cas- me back to the ballroom." tle, Blake said quietly: "You said something to me t'other to bed that night Catherine lay awake

She looked him quietly in the face, but made no reply. "Because," he continued, "because if you do believe it"-

"Hush, there is Mr. Langford !" she Blake himself was not so sure. He exclaimed, interrupting him as Langford came strolling across the lawn.

The two men lunched with her that day, and we fear she played one off self had been the means of placing it against the other.

They were a curious contrast-Blake, handsome, sullen and savage, like a good looking cub only half tamed. to am glad I have made no one but Cap-He had almost forgotten the money good behavior; Langford, with his calm, tain Kennedy acquainted with the fact prize in the personal fascination of the clear cut face, his courteous smile and heiress. Her bold, frank manners, just his dark, passionate eyes. When Cathtouched with feminine tenderness, made erine looked at the former, her expreshavoc with his impetuous heart. He sion was merry, kind and almost mar was tormented with jealousy whenever ternal. When she turned her eyes on looked out. The country for miles another man approached her, and Cath-Langford, the expression grew grave around lay buried deep in snowdrift. erine, being a very woman, loved to fan and dreamy.

Langford was the first to leave. When he had gone, Blake, who had like black spots on the vast waste of taken rather too much wine, snarled savagely:

"I hate that fellow. He's as sly as fox and as cold blooded as a stoat."

"He is my very good friend," said Catherine, "and I must ask you not to abuse him."

Blake, forgetting himself in his fury of daylight, secorted by armed police, was nonsense can't go on forever. You waltzed with that fellow Langford five times jealousy.

even if it were so it would be no concern of yours."

"Wouldn't it, by ----!" exclaimed the view a stretch of black bog land, control. "Remember what I told you." "D-n him!" muttered Blake, flush-"If you use language like that, I with a gaze so cool, so contemptuous, that the hot blood mounted to his face. Then, without replying, she quietly touched the bell. He came close to her and seized her two hands in his. "Kate !"

held her firmly, looking into her face.

fair means I'll try foul."

"You are not sober," oue replied were the girl of some low inn."

"What a dreadful thing it is to be a her away. With tigerlike force she tore woman, especially in Ireland, where the hand away and shrieked. "Help, help! Will no one come?" She tore, fought, struggled and

For several hours after she had gone day about Mary Carey. I hope you don't thinking of Patrick Blake. When at length she fell asleep, she dreamed of length she fell asleep, she dreamed of him, and in the morning when she ed away. awoke her brain was ringing with the echo of his threat, "If you won't have me, you shall never have any other man. The singularity of his manner puzzled her, so did the strange coincidence of the mark upon his cheek. That she herthere she did not for a moment doubt, and yet it certainly seemed very strange. "After all," she said to herself, "I of my having struck the man. That part of the story 1 will continue to keep to myself."

Scarcely a soul was to be seen abroad, ward and saw you struggling with a for already walking was dangerous, and mained a prisoner. At the end of that and oozy with the recent fallen rain.

dripping, and the ground was spongy, but the air revived her and strengthened the courage which a week of quietness had brought. It made her form a resolution to walk daily in the grounds until such time as she could shake off the alone. One evening about a fortnight from the time when this resolution was formed she left the house to take her customary walk in the grounds. It was was beginning to fall. The sky was of a bluish gray, flecked here and there with floating mist, which settled in little clouds upon the hilltops, and the wind which touched her cheek was like an icy hand. The police, patrolling before the house, saluted as she passed by and eral of the most prominent citizens of Havana that it is his intention to deliver the city in good order to the screamed until all her strength seemed Americans, and put the reins of govebbing from her Presently the low ernment in their hands in such a manmurmur of voices reached her ear She ner that they will be able to enter uttered a wild, wailing sob and swoonimmediately upon their duties and take up the work at the exact point "Musha, deal gently with her. See, where he leaves off. The newspapers thanks be to God, she's comin round. have ceased their attacks against the A little more water, Pat Monnaghan. Americans, and most of the Spanish residents of the city fondly hope that Och, my curse and the curse of all good annexation will be their fate, instead It was Catherine's favorite old groom of an independent government domwho spoke as he leaned tremblingly inated by the Cubans. General Blanco, however, is working to the end that both the Spanish and Cuban over the form of his mistress, who lay, half swooning, her head resting on the way.

DISBANDMENT OF CUBANS.

factions may be united in an amicable

American Methods Are Being Rapidly Introduced In Santiago.

A special dispitch to the Globe-Democrat, under date of the 27th ultimo, says that General Castillo, of the Cuban army, came to Santiago on the previous day, at the invitation of General Lawton, to have an interview with the American commander regarding the disbandment of the Cuban forces in the Santiago province. The masked man. The moment I appeared two officers had a long talk at the the ruffian vanished. He was not alone. palace, after which General Castillo returned to Boniato.

General Castillo expressed the opinion that the disbandment of the Cubans could be effected without trouble, but nothing definite was decided upon. He said that the hostility of the Cubans growing out of the refusal of the Americans to permit joint military occupation of the conquered territory, with the Cuban flag floating over the palace beside the stars and stripes, was disappearing, and under advice of cool heads their scheme of making an armed demand for their alleged rights had been abandoned.

The Cuban forces at Cobre, Boniato, Gibara and other places in the mountains are subsisting on the country, and have made no applications to General Lawton for rations. Complaints from the railroad companies and plantation owners of depredations are received occasionally, but as a general thing good order prevails in the prov-

General Lawton today instructed General Wood to formulate a plan of Havana since the beginning of hostil- civil government based on the old regime, with modifications. He thinks it advisable that the number of officers necessary to the government of the city should be fixed immediately. Gen-He says that the all-absorbing topic eral Wood will fix the the salaries and

Native officers will be appointed as with the exception of excited conver- far as possible, as they understand the

A beautiful young woman entered. seized her bridle and brought her horse

"I mean nothing of the kind, but

Pale with indignation, Catherine prepared to leave the room, but before she could do so Blake sprang up and closed the door.

"Once more I ask you, will you mar-ry me?" he cried, facing her.

She looked him from head to foot

She tried to release herself, but he

"Don't wake up the devil in me. Don't make me do what I might be sorry for. You've robbed me of my birth- not late, but the days were short, and right-don't go further and make me as she left the house she saw that a star mad. As sure as you stand there I mean was already glimmering beyond the to have you, and if I can't win you by peak of a distant hill and that night haughtily, "and you talk to me as if I Then releasing herself as the servant entered the room she said quietly: "Tell the groom to bring round Mr.

Blake's horse at once."

eyelids quivered, then unclosed. "Stand back," said a voice she knew. She walked over to the window and "She's all right now." She looked up and met the tender eyes of Mr. Langford. The little hamlets, with closed doors "What has happened?" she asked, and windows and snow laden roofs, lay trembling. "I was coming along the avenue white. when I heard a call for help. I ran for-still the snow was falling fast.

the ruffian vanished. He was not alone. "I shall not be able to leave the house

There were others with him, I'm sure.' today," said Catherine to herself, and "My men are searching the place," said the sergeant of police. "If the rasat the thought she did not feel altogeth-"You mean your sweetheart," cried er sorry. The idea of walking abroad in cals are in the woods, we'll catch them." by no means pleasant to her. For a whole week, therefore, she retears blinded her eyes, and putting her hand on Langford's arm she said faintly: time a rapid thaw set in. The snow dissolved and disappeared, leaving to dotted with dripping thatched cabins

Panting, after her long confinement, for a breath of fresh air, Catherine put on her hat and cloak one evening and walked in the shrubberies surrounding the castle. The boughs of the trees were to the castle. Meantime the police searched far and wide, but found no trace whatever of her assailants. TO BE CONTINUED.

Miscellaneous Reading.

WASHINGTON, August 28 .- News has reached Washington from an at- ince. tache of the Cuban government who has been constantly in the city of ities between the Cubans and the Spaniards, which discloses an interesting condition of affairs in the Cuban capital.

among the inhabitants is the prospect- make the nominations, which will be ve visit of the United States commis- submitted to General Lawton for his sion charged with supervision of the approval.

sations upon the streets and in the language and temper of the people cafes regarding the outcome of this better than the Americans do. The visit, the city is in an enjoyable state police force is to be organized. The of tranquility, and has resumed its force will be increased, and the sentiactivity in a commercial way, the nels, whose presence in the city arous-wharves and docks taking on the es discontent, will be withdrawn and appearance they wore before the block- called into service only on special reade by the American fleet played such quest to guard life and property.

being worked for the benefit of the calls upon the government for food, reopened and enjoy a large patronage.

last week a group of promiuent Span-out of service, and will have to answer from attempting the game.

Disturbances In the Capital o Riotous Cuba Have Ceased. special to The Globe-Democrat.

military evacuation of the island, and shackles of the police and drive abroad

She waited for a little time, thinking that her cousin might call. He made no sign.

She ordered her horse and rode over to the inn where he had taken up his quarters, thinking perhaps to get a glimpse of him. He heard of her coming and kept out of the way.

Then she sent him this "petit mot," which was carried by her groom :

MY DEAR COUSIN-I should very much like to shake hands with you if you have no objection. Will you come and take lunch with me some day soon? Yours very truly, CATHERINE POWER.

The young man tore up the letter.

The next day he was in Castlebar, where he had a long talk with Peter Linnie. That worthy gave him very sensible advice, pointing out to him that in all possibility he was missing a great chance. Why shouldn't he capture the heiress and her money by honorable marriage and so make odd things even?

"She's a handsome woman." said the lawyer, "and all the men are after her. Spake up to her like a gentleman and I'll lay odds on she'll have you."

The result of this advice was that Blake dressed himself in his best, stuck a flower in his coat, mounted his horse. and rode off to Castle Craig. Thus smartened up, he was a strapping young fellow, handsome enough to catch any woman's eye.

He was shown up into the drawing room, where he waited scowling and trembling, for he was not much used to fine society. A few minutes later a beautiful young woman, with a smile like a May morning, entered and made him welcome, greeting him like an old friend. Being in her heart very sorry for him, she was full of sympathy and effusion, and he went away strongly convinced that she would be an easy conquest.

For a little time after that Blake was a constant visitor at the castle, and being of good family he had no difficalty in getting invitations to other county houses where Catherine was a frequent guest. He neglected his wild companions, paid strict attention to his shadow and give her a hint that you wardrobe, and altogether seemed a reformed character. His cousin gave him every encouragement. He rode with her, danced with her and was constantly near her.

"She's yours for the asking," said Peter Linnie, when the squireen reported progress.

to a dead halt. "Stop, I must speak to you," he cried. "It's been on my mind for a long time to tell you how much I love you. I do-you must have seen it. Now, I'm your cousin, and all this place should have been mine, but that's all over now, Kate, and you're welcome to it all. It's you I want and not the money, and if you'll have me, Kate''-"So this is a proposal?" cried Catherine. "You mean, I suppose, that you want me to marry you? Blake replied by leaning from his saddle and trying to take her in his arms, but she drew herself up and waved him back.

"Cousin," she said, "I want you to do me a great favor."

"Well?"

"Never speak of this again. If you do, we shall cease to be friends." "You don't mean that?" he cried angrily.

"I do mean it. There are two reasons, either of which should be sufficient. First reason, we are cousins, and I don't believe in the marriage of near relations; second reason, I like you very well as a relation, but should find you intolerable as a husband. I hope I'm not hurting your feelings, but in a case like this it's better to be quite frank." He released his hold on her bridle, and she trotted on, leaving him transfixed. When she had gone about 100 yards, she paused and beckoned. He remained stationary. She trotted back to him. "Come, cousin," she said brightly, 'let's shake hands and end the matter forever. Surely we can still be friends?" He waved her hand aside and glared at her with bloodshot eyes. His face ford stepped forward with an exclamawas livid and his mouth worked convulsively.

"If I don't have you, no other man shall," he said.

say."

you are very impertinent," "Then head, "and you had better go back to in all I meet." Mary Carey."

With this parting shot she rode away back till she disappeared.

Mad and furious, Blake again resorted to his adviser, Peter Linnie.

"It's as plain as a barn door," said that luminary. "She has heard about Carey's daughter, and she's jealous. that's all. It's a good sign that, not a bad one. You must stick to her like her don't care a brass farthing for anybody but herself. Never say die, my boy, and you'll win her yet."

The young man acted on the advice to drink as he had at first felt inclined love."

to do, he turned up again as if nothing

The servant disappeared, while Blake stood like a man dazed, as indeed he of the park. was. Without looking toward him Catherine sat down at the piano and be- utes, choosing a narrow pathway, and her fingers wander idly across the keys. beech trees when there was a rustling When she looked around, Blake had and scuffling among the boughs. She disappeared.

sign of him; a second week, and still brushwood through which she had first no sign. She began to feel sorry, for passed. though her heart was quite untouched she couldn't help admitting to herself thought Catherine. Then she asked: that she was partly to blame.

Then came the mysterious assault in the woods, which we have already described, and Catherine's visit to Cladich tion, and that is the pathway to the castle under escort of the police.

The moment she looked at her cousin Catherine had no doubt whatever that toward her, touched his hat and moved she had discovered her assailant. Up to on in the direction of the castle. that moment she had scarcely thought should have been guilty of such a "detise."

Recovering herself in a moment and forcing a smile, she said:

"Why haven't you been to see me? I have been expecting you every day."

The young man's face was a study. Shame, confusion and reckless audacity were all mingled there. He saw in a moment that his secret was discovered, but he did not seem to care. Answering the smile with one of ugly significance and glancing at Langford, he replied:

"I thought maybe you might have pleasanter company." And then with a forced laugh and a shrug of the shoalders he strolled away into the ballroom. The moment he had gone Catherine's self possession left her. She trembled and seemed about to fall, when Langtion and supported her.

"What is it?" he cried tenderly. "Nothing, nothing," she murmured. "That ruffian has insulted you."

"Indeed, no," she said gently. "For "It isn't nonsense. I mean what I whatever has occurred I am myself springing step. About a quarter of an most to blame, but I am miserable, miserable. I wished to be friends with startled, again the trees rustled, and returned the beauty, with a toss of the all the world, and I awaken only hatred suddenly she saw a man, wearing a

"Catherine," said Langford, "there coppice. is but one way out of all your perplexfor the second time and never looked ity. I have told it before-let me repeat leaped into the avenue and seized her it now. I love you. I have loved you round the waist. from the moment we first met. Become my wife."

he drew her tenderly toward him. At herself being lifted from the ground first she seemed to yield, but it was on- and carried toward the woods her powly for a moment. Disengaging herself, er returned. She uttered a piercing she said quietly :

"I shall never marry. I love my liberty too well, and indeed all that I have toward the castle. seen of men makes me more and more afraid. You say you love me. Others have said the same thing. It is friendso given. Instead of sulking and flying ship, true friendship, that I need, not alarm, great as it was, seemed to have had occurred. Catherine received him back to her, and she added with a laugh: his hand over her mouth and dragged of food.

watched her disappear among the trees

She had walked for about ten mingan to play-lightly, carelessly, letting was about to turn into an avenue of started. A man whose face was averted A week passed, and there was no from her was emerging from the dense

> "Why, he has no right to be here," 'What are you doing here? This part of the park is quite private. If you want the house, it lies in that direcroad.

Thus addressed, the man half turned before the blockade.

Catherine moved on, too, pacing the it possible that even Patrick Blake long beech avenue with erect head and

She looked up and met the tender eyes of Mr. Langford.

hour later, however, she was again crape mask, cautiously creep from the

This time, before she could speak, he

So petrified was she by this sudden attack that for a moment she could nei-His arm still encircled her waist, and ther move nor cry, but when she felt shriek and by a mighty effort tore herself from the assailant's grasp and ran acts during the truce. Sickness and suffering are prevalent voices should, whistles shrieked, and in Havana, and many deaths result all her work at night. The Spaniards lights flickered in the distance. But the public kitchens are still running, and the poor throng before these places no effect upon the ruffian. He raised his In a moment her high spirits came shrieking victim from the ground, put each day to receive a small allowance havoc with the shipping. The culti-vated zones about the city, established of the central places. Each garrison by General Blanco for the production is under command of two or more offiof sufficient fresh food to erable the cers, and is in readiness for any emercity to withstand a long siege, are still gency that may arise. The orders prohibiting or limiting the soldiers and the starving poor, but the sale of commodities by licensed vendricher inhabitants have ceased their ers have all been rescinded.

General. Shafter's regulation requirand the milk men, hucksters and ped- ing vessels to remain unloaded in the dlers from the surrounding country harbor until all of the duties upon have again established their routes and their cargoes have been paid has been living is almost as easy and cheap as abolished, and the public warehouses and wharves have been thrown open to All places of amusement and cafes commerce. One of the wharves has closed during the blockade have been been reserved for public use.

Gen. Lawton has ordered that the The bands play in the plazas each stars and stripes be displayed upon evening and promenaders throng the public buildings from sunrise to sunwalks. A bull fight was scheduled for set. Carrying arms by troopers, exyesterday, and the interest centering cept when on duty, is prohibited, and about the prospective fight drew at sentries will not be allowed to load ention for the time away from the their guns except upon the order of an United States and the result of war. officer.

The correspondent states that the Four earthquake shocks were felt credit for this condition of affairs here between 11.10 and 11.15 o'clock is largely due to Captain General Ra- this morning. They were felt most mon Blanco, who since the signing of along the water front, where the buildthe protocol and the refusal of the ings were swayed, glassware was shakgovernment to accept his resignation, en and broken, and floors were has done all in his power to restore cracked.

VESUVIUS KILLED 100.-The.unique dynamite cruiser Vesuvius has joined he city. Nevertheless, he has charged Admiral Sampson's squadron in New he police with the suppression of any York bay. The Spaniards called her gatherings that might promote disor- "The hurler of earthquakes." Comder, and will closely guard the Ameri- mander John E. Pillsbury talked intercans from any possible attack or insult. estingly of his vessel.

In proof of his activity, through Police Inspector Senor Perara, he has had ar-effective in their work. The Vesuvius rested and incarcerated during the is a great success."

The dynamite cruiser only fired 26 iards, whom he believed were forming shots at the batteries defending the a conspiracy to promote riots and dis- entrance to Santiago harbor. order during the visit of the American charges of gun cotton varied from 100 commission, and his harsh activity in to 200 pounds, the aggregate of the this case is likely to prevent others explosive hurled at Santiago's defenses being estimated at 4,000 pounds, or as The Spanish volunteers realize that one of the officers put it, "Ten times their power is fast disappearing, and as much as would be necessary to blow have ceased their acts of barbarity up every ship now in New York bay, including the squadron over there, and toward the peaceful inhabitants. They have been informed that they will not the countless other boats." Captain Caucas, of the Spanish flagbe removed from the island, but stripped of their arms and mustered ship Maria Teresa, told Captain Pillsbury that one of the Vesuvius' shells to the civil authorities, under the struck the barracks between the lightsupervision of Americans, for all their house and Morro Castle and killed over 100 soldiers.

Being unarmored, the Vesuvius did daily from the yellow fever. The could have knocked her to pieces in daylight.

> Woman tempted man to eat; but he took to drinking whiskey himself.

the tranquillity of the people and blot out any feeling of hostility toward the American commission upon its visit to