Many whites in this section remember the beautiful lithographs that these agents used to distribute. One of the most striking represented a prosperous cottage home. A handsome little two-story house, surrounded by a strong fence, stood in the midst of a large, well cultivated plantation. Sitting on a chair in the yard was a well-dressed old Negro, peacefully smoking his pipe. He had evidently interpretation of principle into the countres of the countres in three-fourths of the countres in the countres in the state and fail to take it, where does the responsibility lie? For my part I am willing to take all we can get, and keep on fighting until we get it all. I repeat that there is no sacrifice smoking his pipe. The class of the countres of the General Assembly, CHARLES W. F. SPENCER, ESQ., will look after my legal business. The class of the countres of the General Assembly of the Gen just enjoyed a good dinner. The old of principle involved. It is a question woman was in the piazza busy over of expediency, which must be settled her knitting, the daughter was playing in a practical way. on a piano in the parlor and three sons were pitching horseshoes in the yard. It was an unusually fetching lie, and sent many a poor, credulous Negro to the fever and ague infested bottoms of the southwest. Of course, nothing better was to be expected of an emigration agent; but when Uncle Sam stoops to this kind of business, he seems to be getting pretty low down. He has in the postoffice at Yorkville a flaming lithograph, which shows a company of brightly uniformed soldiers on dress parade, and a number of noncommissioned officers in the foreground, all decked out in full dress and in attitudes suggestive only of ease, pleasure and thorough enjoyment. There is also a statement of the pay that men receive for "doing nothing," and altogether the picture is a taking one. But the poor fellow who thinks he will find a soft snap in the army, state, and not only mill the wheat will do well to take warning from the fate of the Negroes who went in search of the ideal home that was pictured to them by the emigration agent.
