TERMS---$2.00 A YEAR IN ADVANCE. SINGLE COPY, FIVE CENTS.

ESTABLISHED 1855.

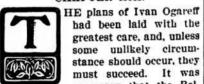

YORKVILLE, S. C., WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 1, 1902.

NO. 1.

THE COURIER OF THE CZAR.

BY JULES VERNE.

CHAPTER XIX.

chala gate should be without defenders at the moment when he should deliver it up to the Tartars. Thus at that circumstance, although it appeared famoment it would be indispensable that the attention of the besieged should be down the right bank of the river.

gate would then be probably abandoned, collected together. The fifth day of October had come.

feared on that side. He knew, he said, Nothing new. that an assault would be made at the

The preparations that had been no-Thus after a council of war which was held at the palace orders were given to bank of the Angara and at the two extremities of the town, where the fortifled terraces rested on the river. This was precisely what Ivan Ogareff wished. He evidently did not reckon that the Bolchaia gate would remain without defenders, but they would be there only in a small number. Beto the diversion such importance that occupied a room in the palace. It was the grand duke would be obliged to oppose it with all his disposable forces. And indeed an incident of an exceptionable gravity, devised by Ivan Ogareff, was to powerfully aid in the accomplishment of his projects. For even if Irkutsk had not been attacked at points distant from the Bolchaia gate and along the right bank of the river that incident would have sufficed to draw the chief body of the defenders to the place where Ivan Ogareff wishcause at the same time a most terrible catastrophe.

All the chances were then that the gate, being free at the hour fixed, would be given up to the thousands of Tartars who were waiting under the thick cover of the forest on the east. During Irkutsk were constantly on the alert. All the measures which were required to repel an attack on points never before threatened were taken.

The grand duke and General Voranzoff visited the various posts which had been strengthened by their orders. The picked corps of Wassili Feodor occupled the north of the town, but with the injunction to march at once to where the danger should be most pressing. The right bank of the Angara was protected by the only artillery at their

With these measures taken in time, thanks to the opportune recommendations of Ivan Ogareff, there was every reason to hope that the prepared attack would not succeed. In that case the tresses. Tartars, discouraged for the time, without doubt would defer for a few days any new attack against the town. Besides, the troops expected by the grand duke might arrive any hour. The safety or the loss of Irkutsk hung on a

On that day the sun, which had risen at twenty minutes past 6, had set at Irkutsk on the right bank, between the scabbard and returned to the combat. 5:40. Twilight would still have to struggle with night for two hours. Then space would be filled with thick darkness, for heavy clouds hung still in the air, and the moon would not appear. This profound obscurity would favor more completely the plans of Ivan Ogareff. Already, for some days, an extremely keen frost had come as a prelude to the rigors of the Siberian winter, and on that night the cold was still more plercing. The soldiers posted on the right bank of the Angara, being forced to hide their presence, had not kindled any fires. They therefore suffered dreadfully from great lowering of the temperature. At some feet below them the ice blocks floated past, following the current of the river. During all that day they had seen them in close ranks floating rapidly between the two banks. That circumstance, observed by the grand duke and his officers, had been considered as fortunate. It was evident that if the bed of the Angara threw an uninterrupted Nadia, frightened, yet at the same of the river became obstructed the passage of it would become altogether impracticable.

The Tartars would not be able to attempting to cross the river over the blocks of ice when the cold should have joined them, that was not possible. The must succeed. It was field, newly cemented, would not have necessary that the Bol- been strong enough for the passage over it of an attacking column. But Ivan Ogareff did not regret that vorable to the defenders of Irkutsk, for the traitor knew well that the Tartars drawn to another point of the city; were not seeking to cross the Angara hence a diversion agreed upon with the and that at least on that side the atemir. That diversion had to take place tempt would only be a feint. Neveralong the suburbs of Irkutsk, up and theless toward 10 o'clock at night the state of the river visibly changed, to The attack on those two points would the extreme surprise of the besieged be made very carnestly and at the same and now to their disadvantage. The time a feigned attempt to cross the An- passage, up to that time impracticable, gara on its left bank. The Bolchaia suddenly became possible. The bed of the Angara soon became free. The especially as on that side the advance floating ice, which for some days had posts, which were said to be at some come down the river in great quantidistance off, would seem to have been ties, disappeared, and very little could be seen between the two banks.

The Russian officers, who had Before twenty-four hours the capital of ticed this change in the state of the eastern Siberia ought to be in the hands river, made it known to the grand of the emir and the grand duke in the duke. Besides, it was explained in this power of Ivan Ogareff. During all that way that at some narrow portion of the day an unusual movement was taking Angara the floating ice had accumuplace in the camp of the Angara. From lated and found a barrier. We know the windows of the palace and from the that such was the case. The passage houses of the right bank one could see of the Angara was therefore open to distinctly that important preparations the besiegers; hence the necessity for were being made on the opposite the Russians to watch with greater attention than ever.

Numerous Tartar detachments were In the camp of the Angara there was seen moving toward the camp and thus plenty of agitation, as was proved by hourly re-enforcing the troops of the the lights constantly flitting about. At ever, their being able to set the strucemir. This was the preparation for a verst up above, as also down below the diversion which had been agreed the point where the fortification slopes upon, and it was being made in the down to the river, there was a dull most ostentatious manner. Moreover, murmur, which proved that the Tar-Ivan Ogareff did not conceal from the tars were on foot, waiting for some grand duke that some attack was to be signal. Again an hour passed by.

Two o'clock in the morning was about two extremities of the town along the to strike from the clock tower of the orders, and soldiers running to execute river, and he counseled the grand duke cathedral of Irkutsk and no movement to re-enforce those two points more di- had taken place to disclose the hostile intentions of the besiegers. The grand duke and his officers began to ask ticed, coming to the support of Ivan themselves if they had not been led found themselves separated from each Ogareff's recommendations, it was nec- into error, if it had really entered into other. Nadia, distracted, ran along the essary to take some account of them. the plan of the Tartars to attempt to lower rooms, called her campanion and

The grand duke, General Voranzoff, their aids-de-camp, waited therefore, ready to give their orders according to the circumstances.

It has been stated that Ivan Ogareff a pretty large room, situated on the ground floor, and its windows opened out upon a side terrace. One need only step a few paces on this terrace to window, was waiting for the hour of action to arrive. Evidently the signal could only come from him. Once this signal was given, when most of the defenders of Irkutsk should have been ed precisely to bring them. It would called to the points openly attacked. his plan was to leave the palace and to go and accomplish his work. He waited then in the dark, like a tiger ready to spring upon its prey. Meanwhile, some minutes before 2 o'clock, the grand duke asked that Michael Strogoff-it was the only name Nadia and forced her back into a corthat day the garrison and population of he could give to Ivan Ogareff-should be brought to him. An aid-de-camp came to his room, the door of which was closed. He called him. Ivan Ogareff, motionless near the window and invisible in the darkness, took good care not to answer. The grand duke was then informed that the courier of the czar was not at that moment in the palace. Two o'clock struck. It was the moment that action had been agreed on with the Tartars, who were ready for the assault. Ivan Ogareff opened the window of his room and placed himself at the north angle of the side terrace. Below him in the shade flowed the waters of the Angara, which roared as they broke against the piles of the but-

Ivan Ogareff drew a flint from his pocket and lit with it a piece of cotton wool impregnated with priming powder, which he threw into the river. It aside his weapon, he threw him a secwas by the order of Ivan Ogareff that ond time to the ground. torrents of mineral oil had been cast on the surface of the Angara. Springs of naphtha had been discovered above ing a sword. He drew it from the village of Poshkavsk and the town.

this terrible means for setting fire to short, to deal with a blind man. Irkutsk. He therefore made use of the immense reservoir which contained the threatened her companion in such an combustible liquid. He had only to unequal struggle, ran to the door, callmake a few canals to draw in streams ing help. into the river. These he had made that very night, some hours before. The cotton wool had been cast on the waters of the Angara. In an instant, as if the current had been made of alcohol, all the river became a mass of flames, up and down the stream, with the rapidity of electricity. Volumes of blue flames covered the whole surface of the river and shot far up into the sky.

The few blocks of ice that came floating down the river, being seized by the the ear of the blind man. He wished surface of a furnace, and the water, warning of his approach, to strike him day and stated my business. sent off as vapor, rose hissing to the with a certain blow. The traitor did clouds. At that very moment the fir- not dream of fighting, but of assasing began at the north and at the south sinating him whose name he had stoof the town. The batteries of the camp len.

sand Tartars rushed to the assault of sort of admiration that terrible scene. the ramparts. The houses along the It seemed that the old coolness had high banks, constructed of wood, took come back to him, fire in every direction. An immense light dissipated the shades of night.

had good reason to applaud. The di- armed with a sword. But by what version which he had planned was ter favor from heaven was he able to overrible. The defenders saw themselves placed between the attack of the Tartars and the disasters of an immense conflagration. The bells sounded, and hastened to the points attacked and to the houses which were being devoured combat all the advantage was in his manage either rafts or boats. As for by the fire, which was threatening to favor. That immovableness of the communicate itself to the whole city. blind man completely froze him. He The Bolchaia gate was almost free. It was with difficulty that any defenders had been left there.

Ivan Ogareff re-entered his room, then brilliantly lit up by the flames from the Angara that overtopped the balustrades of the ramparts. Then he prepared to leave it. But scarcely had he opened the door when a woman rushed into the room, with her garments dripping wet, her hair in disor-

"Sangarre!" cried Ivan Ogareff in the first moment of surprise and not imagining that it could be any other woman than the gypsy.

It was not Sangarre; it was Nadia. At the moment when, seeking refuge on the block of ice, the young girl had uttered that cry when she saw the fire spread over the current of the Angara. Michael Strogoff had seized her in his arms, and he had dived with her to seek even in the depths of the river a shelter from the flames. After having swum under the waters Michael Strogoff had fortunately put his foot on ground at the quay, and he had Nadia still safe with him.

Michael Strogoff was touching at last his goal. He was at Irkutsk. "To the palace of the governor!" said he to Nadia. In less than ten minutes afterward both arrived at the entrance to that palace, the massive stone walls of which were being licked by the long flames from the Angara, without, howture on fire. Beyond, the houses on the bank were all in flames.

Michael Strogoff and Nadia entered without difficulty into that palace, which was open for all. In the midst of the general confusion no one noticed them, although their clothes were dripping wet. A crowd of officers came for them blocked up the grand salon on the ground floor.

There Michael Strogoff and the young girl, in the midst of so great a crowd, asked to be led before the grand duke. beld at the palace orders were given to concentrate the defense on the right bank of the Angara and at the two exkept up from the advanced posts, and fore her. She entered, and she found shells had hissed through the air, and herself unexpectedly face to face with this time there was nothing of the kind. him whom she had seen at Ichim. whom she had seen at Tomsk, in the presence of that man whose cursed him whom he thought to be the courier hand an instant later would have delivered up the city.

"Ivan Ogareff!" cried she. On hearing his name pronounced the miserable wretch trembled. His true name being once known, all his plans would be ruined. He had only one thing to do-to kill the being, whoever overlook the course of the Angara. A it might be, who had just pronounced profound darkness reigned in that it. Ivan Ogareff threw himself on Naroom. Ivan Ogareff, standing near a dia, but the young girl, with a knife in her hand, placed her back to the wall, resolved to defend herself.

"Ivan Ogareff!" cried again Nadia knowing well that detested name would bring succor to her. "Ah, you shall be silent!" said the traitor. "Ivan Ogareff!" cried a third time the intrepid young girl in a voice whose hate had increased tenfold the force. Drunk with fury, Ivan Ogareff drew a dagger from his belt, rushed upon ner of the room. It was all over with her when the wretch, suddenly knocked down by a tremendous blow, rolled to the ground. "Michael!" cried Nadia.

It was Michael Strogoff. Michael Strogoff had heard the appeal of Nadia. Guided by her voice, he had arrived at the room of Ivan Ogareff, and he had entered by the door which had been left open.

"Fear nothing, Nadia," he said as he placed himself between her and Ivan Ogareff.

"Ah," screamed the young girl, "take care, brother! The traitor is armed! He can see well!"

Ivan Ogareff had risen, and, believ ing that he had the advantage over a blind man, he threw himself upon Michael Strogoff. But with one hand Michael seized the arm of him who could see well and with the other, turning Ivan Ogareff, pale with fury and shame, remembered that he was carry-He had also recognized Michael Stro-Ivan Ogareff had resolved to employ goff. A blind man! He had only, in

Nadia, terrified at the danger which

"Shut that door, Nadia," said Michael Strogoff. "Do not call any one, and let me do it. The courier of the czar has nothing to fear today from this wretch. Let him come at me if he dare. I am waiting for him."

Meanwhile Ivan Ogareff, gathering himself together, as it were, like a tiger did not utter a word. The noise of his step, his very breathing, he would have wished to keep back from volley of shot and shell. Many thou- time confident, contemplated with a

Michael Strogoff had as his only weapon his Siberian knife, and he could "At last!" said Ivan Ogareff. And he not see his adversary, who was eve power him? Ivan Ogareff glanced at his adversary with a visible anxiety. That superhuman calmness worked upon him. In every ablebodied man of the population vain, appealing to his reason, he kept saying that in the inequality of such a had sought with his eyes the place where he must strike his victim. He had found it. Who, then, was preventing him from giving the finishing blow?

> his sword full at the breast of Michael Strogoff. An imperceptible movement of the knife of the blind man turned the blow. Michael Strogoff had not been touched and coolly seemed to wait another attack without, however, challenging it. A cold sweat ran from the fare of Ivan Ogareff. He recolled a pace, then made another thrust. But the second blow, like the first, fell harmless. A simple parrying with the large knife had sufficed to turn aside the sword of the traitor. The latter, mad with rage and terror before that living statue. fixed his terrified look on the large open eyes of the blind man. Those eyes that seemed to read the very bottom of his heart and which could not see-those eyes seemed to have for him an awful fascination.

At length he made a blow and thrust

Suddenly Ivan Ogareff gave a cry. An unexpected light had entered his "He can see!" cried he. "He can

And, like a deer trying to re-enter its cave, step by step, terrified, he retreated to the lower end of the room. Then the statue took life. The blind man walked straight to Ivan Ogareff, and, placing himself in front of him, said: "Yes, I see—I see the blow of the knout with which I have marked you, traitor and coward! I see the place where I am going to strike you. Defend your lifel. It is a duel which I condescend to offer you. My knife will suffice me against your sword!"

"He sees!" sald Nadia. "God of mercy, is it possible?"

Ivan Ogareff felt himself to be lost. But suddenly, taking courage, sword in front, he rushed upon his impassible gan serious life behind a yoke of oxen. adversary. The two blades crossed, but at the first clash of the knife of Michael Strogoff, grasped firmly in the to the heart, fell dead to the ground.

At that moment the door of the room, pushed from the outside, opened. The earned by my own efforts." grand duke, accompanied by some officers, showed bimself on the threshold. The grand duke advanced. He recognized on the ground the dead body of of 1899 in the press gallery at Washingof the czar, and then in a threatening voice he asked:

"Who has slain this man?" "I," replied Michael Strogoff.

One of the officers placed a revolver to his head, ready to fire. "Your name?" asked the grand duke before giving the order to shoot him dead.

"Your highness," answered Michael Strogoff, "ask me rather the name of the man stretched at your feet." "That man I have recognized. He is a servant of my brother. He is the czar's courier." "That. man, your highness, is not a courier from the czar. He is Ivan Oga-"Ivan Ogareff!" cried the grand duke.

"Yes: Ivan the traitor." "But you-who are you?" "Michael Strogoff."

TO BE CONTINUED

MOON AND MIRROR.-Some night when the moon is at its full and the air is free from haze, go outdoors with a hand mirror and hold it so that the moon's image will fall on it. Make the experiment, presumably, when the moon is well up in the heavens. Instead of seeing one image, as will expect, you will see four. One of these images will be very bright, but the other three will be dull, like unburnished silver. They will be in a straight line, one of the dull images on one side of the bright image and two on the other side of it. Turn the mirror slowly around and the images will appear to revolve around on a common center.

The explanation of this queer little phenomenon may be found in the fact that there are two surfaces on a mirror, one in front and the other in the back, where the quicksilver is.

The brightest of the images is from the moon itself. The others are what are known as secondary images, reflected from the front to the back of the mirror and thence to the eye. A similar experiment may be made with the planets Venus, Jupiter and Mars or with any of the first magnitude stars, such as Sirius, Capella, Arcturus, Vega and Antares. The planets and the stars, however make only three images, the number of images depending on the breadth of the object. A perfectly clear night is essential.-New York Herald.

HE WALKED .- An insurance officer who claims to be the only man in his business who ever talked to J. Pierpont Morgan, remarked the other day: "I could more easily see the hundred hardest men in San Francisco than do it again. Never mind how I did it. burning liquid, melted like wax on the to strike him before even he had any I walked in on Morgan at the office one "'How did you get in here?"

> "'I walked in,' said I. "'Well walk out,' said he. "I did."

Miscellaneous Reading.

HOW CONGRESSMEN BEGAN LIFE. Many of Them Earned Their First Dollar by Driving Oxen.

true that other kinds of success may it." rank higher in popular estimation, but those who gain them are few. To be a congressman is a high ambition for an American boy cherishes. It is seldom gratified. Of the many congressmen tirely to industry. I never struck anywho have talked about their early am- thing specially in the line of luck." bitions only one began life with the he educated himself with the house of representatives always in his eye, ent and individual effort." When the voice of the people called house of representatives, but his ambition may lead him higher.

made men. That is one of the signfi- my care." cant things about congress. Glance gressional directory and you will apactive life with a hand on the plow or my income. taught school to earn a living in the interval of law studies.

when asked how he earned his first dolat home, he consented when I was 12 the day time." years of age, that I might drive oxen to plow for one of the neighbors who moral worth has much to do with sucwas not blessed with boys. I received 123 cents a day for my work. While complished was made nossible by "ob-I was studying law I worked at times peeling hemlock bark and cutting cord clean methods in public and private wood at 50 cents per cord, and also in life, and by my fixed purpose always the hay field at the then going price of to be frank and sincere in my dealings $1 and $1.25 per day. I have always with my reliowmen, thereby securing den during the day in the house of the felt a great interest in the farmer and their confidence and esteem."—Brookhis work."

E. S. Chandler, Jr., is a new member of the Mississippi delegation. Mr. Chandler is a lawyer, like Mr. Haskins, and, like the Vermont member, he be-

"I made my first dollar hauling cord wood to a country town and selling it," said Mr. Chandler. "My team was a hand of the Siberian Bunter, the sword yoke of oxen, with which I continued flew in pieces, and the wretch, pierced the business of wood hauling for some little time and so accumulated the first sum of money I had ever had which I ing the horrors of the prisons in that

Charles F. Scott, of the Kansas delegation, is an editor. He is not new in illustrates in his own person the evils Washington, for he spent three months that may befall any traveler who hapton for the Topeka Capital. Mr. Scott made his first dollar clerking in a country store at 50 cents a day.

J. Ross Mickey, of Illinois, is a law-

"I never had a dollar given me." said Mr. Mickey. "I was raised on a farm and I made my first dollar dropping corn on an old-fashioned corn planter.' John W. Cassingham, Ohio, a business man, had a start very like that of Mr. Mickey. His first dollar was earned as a hand on a farm at the age of 16.

"I remember well how I earned my first dollar," said W. W. Skiles, another Ohio congressman, who is serving his first term. "I earned it assisting in driving sheep for a neighbor drover for several days."

Elias Deemer is a wealthy lumber merchant of Williamsport, Pa. The first dollar Mr. Deemer earned was as a clerk in a general country store.

Joseph B. Perkins is an author-con gressman, though a lawyer by profession. "The first money I earned." he said, "was for copying papers in the law office where I was a student." T. L. Glenn, of Idaho, is another of the many lawyers in the new congress. "I am not sure just how I earned my first dollar," he said. "but if my memory is correct it was driving a yoke of was building a levee on the Mississippi of a Moor. His acquaintance with Ara-co-defendants, herein, the property river at Cairo, Ill., in 1856."

"My first money was made by ordinary manual labor," said Joseph T. Johnson, of South Carolina. Mr. Johnson is too modest a man to tell all that this represents of hardship and struggle, but Dr. Smith, his family physician, has told the story of his early struggles. His father died when he was 2 years old and his mother when he was 14. "I have always understood that he cut cord wood, picked cotton, hoed cotton and did what work he could get to do on Saturdays, and in vacation," said Dr. Smith. "I have seen many a time the oxen he drove through the streets of Due West morn ings and evenings before and after colpay his expenses. That he succeeded in getting a splendid education no man will deny. He has made a special study of economic questions and, in my opinion, is the best informed man in the state."

Mr. Johnson says that he formed an ambition to go to congress when he visited Washington 20 years ago.

It is interesting to note the causes ute their political prosperity. Mr. Scott mules brought the travelers to Shessays taking good health, average intelgranted, he thinks work has been the waited any Christian who should atsecret of his success. "I have stood tempt to enter its gates. by my friends," he said, "and have tried to make my enemies ashamed; the town and the plan was to spend the have aimed to tell the truth and have night in their house. They discovered worked all the time."

Patrick Henry, of Mississippi, although one night only. Mr. Henry expresses it in a different

"Determination," he said, "had a Certainly to be elected a member of steadfastness to every promise made, the house of representatives may be and perhaps a thoughtful interest in a accounted a success. It is undoubtedly true friend had something to do with

Mr. Perkins, of New York, is modest when it comes to a question of his success, but he too, thinks work comes American boy and one which many an first. "The moderate degree of success I have met," he said, "I attribute en-Judge Mickey, of Illinois, thinks firm determination to be a member of that work paves the way to success. ducts; streets paved with rough stones congress. He was a southern man and "Whatever I have achieved," he says, 'may be attributed to earnest, persist Mr. Deemer thinks that "persever e was undoubtedly ready. That ance and close attention to business, statesman has not risen above the were the keys to his success in life. Mr. Smiles, of Ohio, takes the same view. "I attribute my success," he The new congress has more than the said, "to endeavoring to attend strictly usual number of new members and to my own business affairs and profesamong them the full proportion of self- sionally to the business entrusted to Congressman Cassingham of the through the biographies in the con- same state said: "Such success as I have attained I attribute to an earnest preciate how much more representative effort to discharge any duties entrustis the highest legislative body in the ed to me in a way to merit the approvland than the law-making body of any al of those placing responsibility upon other nation. There are no hereditary me, and being careful to see that my lawmakers. Most legislators began an expenditures were each year less than

Mr. Glenn gives one special form of industry the credit for what he has The case of Kitredge Haskins, of been able to accomplish. "Whatever Vermont, is typical: "I was born and success I have attained," he said, 'was reared upon one of the hill farms of due to reading when most of my neigh- ment was growing. Widham county," said Mr. Haskins, bors slept or while I was waiting for the preparation of my meals, as I sellars. "My father having older boys dom had an opportunity to study in Mr. Chandler, of Mississippi, thinks cess. He says that what he has acyn Eagle.

AMONG THIEVES IN MOROCCO.

dventure of an English Correspon dent Who Penetrated to Shesho-

the London Times in Morocco, has recently attracted considerable attention by his picturesque despatches describcountry and the ambition of the sultan to introduce reforms. Mr. Harris now pens to meet one of the numerous robber hands of Morocco. He has been despoiled of his belongings by road agents of the Morocco type. The incident is all the more interest a poor Moor and then in his proper person, once as a member of a diplomatic mission.

One of his exploits in particular, was ed his nerve to the best advantage and revealed a district in Morocco that no be reasonably safe. In the summer of 1888 Mr. Harris ven- today, complaints being served on W. tured into the Rif mountains among the fanatical Berbers, who were certain lumbia Phosphate company. The comto kill any white man they might catch plaint, after giving the statement of among their wild hills. White men were not their only prey. A little earlier the sultan of Morocco had sent them a governor whom they killed, lawful conveyances, sales and transfers whereupon the sultan decided to let shall be delivered up and cancelled and them alone for a time. bic was imperfect. As he could not talk conveyed and transferred to it as a the character of a deaf mute and relied hereby be directed to return to the upon a trusty Arab boy, his only com- Virginia-Carolina Chemical company, panion, as a means of communication the consideration paid or agreed to be with the natives.

middle class Moor, legs, arms and face the same be made a charge upon the stained brown, and bestride a mule that property so decreed to be reconveyed. had no prejudices against Christians. The explorer was bound for Sheshouan, a town of 8,000 inhabitants, which had only recently been heard of, a few car- Standard Fertilizer company, the Chitographers having just placed it on cora Fertilizer company, the Berkeley their maps where they supposed it to Chemical company, the Greenville Ferbe. The town is 60 miles from the Mediterranean. The inquisitive natives were phate company, the Carolina Sulphuric informed by the boy that his mater lege hours, in order to make money to lived in Fez and was traveling to Sheshouan. This satisfied nearly everybody, but two men of the Ben-Hassan tribe accused Harris of being a Christian and threatened him with death if he did not instantly turn back. He managed to elude them and learned later that they probably did not suspect his real character, but were merely trying to pick a quarrel as a pretext for robbing him. to which these successful men attrib- In the course of a few days the weary houan, quite a flourishing town, which ligence and a university education for had proclaimed far and wide that death The parents of the Arab boy lived in very soon that Harris was not what he joined from doing business in this state. Congressman Henry W. Palmer, of was represented to be, and bitterly upty of it." Perhaps his idea is not so prevailed upon, by the offer of a large courts of this state.

different from that of Congressman reward, to entertain the stranger for

Thus assured of a night's shelter, and reasonably certain to escape notice in the indistinct light of the evening, Hargreat deal to do with my success, and ris sallied forth to mingle with the also sincerity, honesty of purpose and crowd and see the sights. Everybody was out of doors. Among thousands of bitter enemies the stranger sauntered unobstrusively through the streets, the novelty of his position and the unaccustomed sights making the stroll very interesting.

He was much surprised to find a bridge of solid masonry spanning the river, acqueducts bringing water and distributing it to all the houses and gardens, mills grinding corn, their wheels turned by water from the aqueand bordered by gutters in which fresh water constantly flows, houses with peculiar red tiled roofs found nowhere else, the buildings being much superior to those in some more easily accessible Moroccan towns. The people regard themselves as direct descendants of Mohamet, which probably accounts for the fanatical character of their religion. All next day Mr. Harris lay hidden in the home of his Arab boy. As he was preparing, toward evening, to start back to the coast, it was noised about that a Christian was in town. Some men had arrived with the startling news that the day before they had seen a man who was undoubtedly white and was made up to look like a Moor. He was on his way to Sheshouan and was undoubtedly in the town. Harris's dusk in the disguise of a woman and to send his mules out of town by another route. It was decided, however, that he had no time to lose, as the excite-

Putting on a mountaineer's garb, he stole out of one of the five gates unno ticed, through every one in the streets was talking about the mysterious Christian. Outside the walls he was joined by his Arab boy and a friend of the faithful servant. Through the night they toiled along a mountain path to a servance of the most rigid honesty and distant village, which they reached before daybreak. The white fugitive, whose feet were bleeding from numerous cuts, was hidfriend in need who had accompanied him. Meanwhile his mules were brought from Sheshouan, at midnight the fugitives were once more on the road and 13 hours later the venturesome explorer safely reached the coast. There is little doubt that he would have been caught in Sheshouan if he had attempted to take his mules with him. The guards at the gates were looking for two strangers on mules and their suspicions were not aroused by the apparent mountaineer who made his way on foot and alone out of the

Fight Commenced Against the Virginia-Carolina Chemical Company. South Carolina has joined the fray against the socalled trusts, says a Coing because Harris is one of the leading lumbia dispatch, of Saturday. The suthorities on everything relating to general assembly, last January, in-Morocco. He has explored that country structed the attorney general to invesin several capacities, now disguised as tigate the right of the Virginia-Carolina Chemical company to do business in this state and to institute proceedings against that and other alleged combinations or trusts. It is a long a dare-devil achievement that exhibit- and hard fight and one that has heretofore failed in other states. Attorney Bellenger has gone over the evolution explorer has ever seen before. It is the in a very long report. The general asirony of fate that a man who has sembly is called upon in his report, emerged unscatched from regions which will be issued in a week's time, where the natives would kill him on to strengthen the hand of the state in sight if they knew him should at last its fight. General Bellenger has assofall a victim to common highway plun- ciated with himself former Judge J. H. derers on a road that was supposed to Hudson and J. N. Nathans, of Charleston. The litigation was started here

A. Clark, former president of the Co-

facts as presented by the attorney general, prays for these judgments: First. That all and each of said undeclared to be void and that the said Harris entered this forbidden ground Virginia-Carolina Chemical company very poorly equipped to support the role be ordered to reconvey to its several without betraying himself, he assumed forest, and that the other defendants paid, to each of them respectively, for So Harris set out, in the garb of a the said conveyances and transfers or Second. That a receiver be appointed of the property of the defendants, the Imperial Fertilizer company, the tilizer company, the Columbia Phos-

> Blacksburg Cherokee company. Third. That all agreements entered into by and between the Virginia-Carolina Chemical company and the other defendants herein, or any of them, or with the directors of the other defendants herein or stockholders in restraint of trade and in violation of the act of the general assembly of South Carolina as aforesaid, be set aside and declared null and void.

> Acid Manufacturing company and the Fourth. That the said Virginia-Carolina Chemical company oe adjudged and decreed to have violated the terms and conditions on which it was licensed to do business in this state, and that said licenses be adjudged and decreed to be forfeited and the said Virginia-Carolina Chemical company en-

Fifth. That the said Virginia-Caroli-Pennsylvania, agrees with Mr. Scott on braided their son for asking them to na Chemical company be adjudged and the virtue of work. He attributes his risk their lives by giving shelter to a decreed to have forfeited its right to success in life to "hard work and plen- Christian. Finally, however, they were recognition as a corporation in the