ESTABLISHED 1855.

YORKVILLE, S. C., SATURDAY, APRIL 26, 1902.

NO. 34.

THE SPUR OF FATE.

BY ASHLEY TOWNE.

track of the carriage in which the vehicle had been found, of course, and have been attacked somewhere, but the police were anable to understand how

Darrell or Gordon could have figured of such a shady record that, having

of police, he had disappeared because

Thus the whole matter hung in the several days, which were among the worst that John Darrell could rememczar had again laid their hands upon

"It is a certainty," he said to Gor-

"To Stavropol!" echoed Gordon.

out of me, Robert."

but to no purpose.

consuls."

"She told me that she would proba-

Gordon attempted to dissuade him

"I must go," he said. "I rely upon

Here's a check for my balance at Morgan's, and you'll see it is not small

Darrell took a train that afternoon

at the Gare de l'Est, where he had the extraordinary fortune to encounter

Getchikoff, whom in the past few days he had made many ineffectual attempts to find. The Russian was just alighting from a very elegant private equipage belonging to a young widow of enormous wealth and excel-ent family, but of a reputation some times attacked in whispers. Getchi-journey, and his farewell to the lady was somewhat strenuous, considering

As he was about to board the train

Darrell accosted him. Getchikoff seemed startled, yet neither surprised nor was making arrangements that they should travel together, and before they had ridden five miles he confided to the American that he was engaged to the

every reason, was the most desirable

From Paris to Stavropol is a long way under the best circumstances. To Darrell, with the burden of his nearly hopeless mission, it was almost unendurable. In conversations with Getchi-koff he approached the object of his journey as nearly as he dared, and he obtained the other side of Vera Shevaloff's story. Naturally her father was represented by Getchikoff to have been a traitor to the czar and justly condemned. Yet Getchikoff treated the subject without malignity, almost with sympathy, speaking often of the pri-

to Vera he professed ignorance.

power."

and to give him hope.

talks with Getchikoff.

Vera Shevaloff"-

manded Darrell.

no trouble here.'

excellency!"

on the street.

man at your side."

father?"

America, you know."

vate virtues of Count Konstantin and

"She was only a child then." he said.

that she is now high in the counsels of the nihilists, but I cannot speak of that from my own knowledge. If she were were always bobbing up from unexpected places to hold long and serious

"I will accompany you to a good hotel," said Getchikoff as they prepared to leave the train at the end of their long journey. "Later I hope to have you for my guest at the palace. But this matter of your connection with

"What do you know of that?" de-

"To be frank, I have heard rumors,"

"What is it?" asked Getchikoff.

Have you a message to me from my

"Bilowski!" exclaimed Darrell. "My

thing in life for him.

the public place in which it occurred.

would cause him trouble.

Copyright, 1901, by Charles B. Etherington

CHAPTER VI. PARIS TO STAVROPOL.

I the evening of that day came the swarthy Kilziar bastily and with troubled counte- there was an inference that it must ski," said Darrell. with him briefly in and then he departed. In the matter, and they dared not make Mr. and Mrs. Gor- an arrest upon the evidence of Frandon had gone out, expecting to return cois alone, for he proved to be a man within the hour. Vera had been writof the veranda Darrell sat smoking a cigar and holding silent converse with of fear that his inconvenient past an unruly heart.

A servant had brought a soft felt hat for Darrell to wear, but the young wind, like a vessel taken aback, for man had tossed it down upon a table and had gone out bareheaded into the warm spring evening. Some minutes ber to have experienced. No word the window through which Darrell had passed to the veranda and looked out, but she did not see him, and he did not see her. Turning away, she noticed the hat upon the table, and she held it in her hands for a moment.

tered, and, seeing the bat and deciding that Mr. Darrell did not require it, guilty of ingratitude. I am going to he took it back to the gentleman's Stavropol." room, where it remained unused for many days.

Darrell finished his cigar and re-entered the house. He hoped to find Darrell. "It is a long chance, but I not there, and as he turned to look elsewhere the butler handed him a note written upon cheap paper, hastily folded and sealed with great daubs of wax. He tore it open and read:

The name of the lady has been reported to the police, and immediate action will be taken. She will probably be arrested as an accomplice in the killing of Ladislov. She is not seriously suspected, but it is believed that her arrest will bring The note was unsigned, but the writ ing was Fontaine's. Darrell had received other communications from the detective in similar form. "Will you inform Miss Lorrimer that days. You can reach me through our

I would like to see her here?" said Darrell.

Vera had passed in that house as cousin of the Miss Lorrimer who had been a guest before her and had been called by that name before the serv-

The butler summoned a maid, who went upon her errand and was gone so long that Darrell became anxious and ended the stairs

At the head of the stairway he met the maid, who said:

"We cannot find Miss Lorrimer. am told that she has left the house."

"Have further search made instantly," replied Darrell. "I wish to see her upon a matter of great importance.'

He descended the stairs and in the lower hall met Mr. and Mrs. Gordon, to whom he disclosed his news. He had scarcely done so when the maid returned with the positive assurance that Vera had gone out.

"Kilzlar must have told her that her retreat was discovered." said Gordon. "She could not find any of us!" groaned Darrell. "The poor girl fled alone What a series of fatalities!"

They had passed from the hall into the drawing room. Gordon now turn-

He tore it open.

ed back and, addressing the butler, who stood with the maid near the door, ordered that Francois be summoned at

It appeared upon investigation that Francois could not be found, and upon the back of this instructive incident the police arrived in search of Vera. Naturally they did not find her. Gordon and Darrell lied with calmness and dignity. They denied all knowledge of Mlle. Shevaloff, and they nearly convinced the officers, though those individuals had come with their minds full of perfect certainty. At the expiration of a fruitless hour the police detail departed, doubtless leaving scouts posted near the house. Presently Darrell went out to search for Vera, and he returned after midnight, having learned nothing. No word came from her during the night or the succeeding day. Late in the afternoon both Gordon and Darrell were summoned to the police station of the district and were questioned closely. Like the boy who put 5 cents into the contribution box at church and took out half a dollar, they gave little and gained much more. They returned from the station with a very fair idea of the condition of the Ladislov investigation. It appeared that the police had traced Ladislov to the point where the capture of Vera had been made and a

"Your name is Sergius Bilowski, and | dozen persons present, including prisyou are a prisoner." was the reply-One of the men laid his hand on Dar-looking individual with a face so unrell's arm, but the American thrust

At the same time the other handed turned white, but at the close he set his teeth firmly together, as one who has taken a strong determination.

these men they are mistaken!" cried that Darrell had hard work to follow Darrell. "I'll knock one of them down him. Witnesses were then admitted, very little farther. They had then lost in a minute!"

had failed to get any hint about the them. I will intercede with my fafacts of the rescue by Darrell. The ther."

"But they want a man named Bilow Getchikoff made no reply. Indeed he seemed unable to utter a word. "Do you deny your identity?" demanded the officer who had made the arrest.

"I not only don't deny it," rejoined Darrell, "but I am prepared to prove skov," said the judge, "and will be reing in her room, while in a dark corner sold his information to a minor officer it. Have the kindness to glance at my turned to Siberia at the earliest opporpassport."

The man, with the calmness of a mechanical dummy, took the passport -and kept it. Then; turning to Getchikoff, he said: "You have traveled from Paris with this suspect. What do you know of him? "I believe him to be Sergius Bilowski!" replied Getchikoff, white as a Darrell's mind that the agents of the ghost. "Why, you whelp," exclaimed Darrell, "you were introduced to me by an attache of the British embassy who manded Darrell to follow him, and at the word four guards "fell in" around bly be taken there for trial," replied him with military precision. Resistbe done here. Get to the bottom of the Ladislov case if you can. Spend all the but merely a name, and committed him | vided among the mining towns." money you can use to advantage. to custody. No defense was allowed. most regions of the earth in these trate's signing a document of com-

upon his desk

Darrell was then conducted to a room the matter, he had no cause to com- in the far past. plain of his treatment. He was subkoff was evidently starting upon a long notes, which he carried in an inner pocket of his waistcoat. It appeared to him that the failure to take it was altogether pleased. His manner was money might have been left with him somewhat puzziing to Darrell. It did that he might buy his way out of the not lack cordiality. Indeed Getchikoff prison and get shot by a guard just outside the walls. Such things will of course, had fallen into the hands of lady in whose carriage he had come to the station and that the marriage, for the police. As a matter of form he requested permission to communicate with the American consul, and it was granted. But Darrell was not so simple as to suppose realized fully that he was in a trap, though he could not understand the precise object of the proceedings. Doubtless his arrest was connected with the affairs of Vera Shevaloff. He might be seriously suspected of complicity in her designs, whatever they were, and he smiled grimly in his cell at the thought of his own complete ignorance of the matter. It would have been hard for the governor general's secret police to find a man who knew less, though they had searched the city of the noble character of his wife. As Reflecting upon the problem during "I knew little about her. It is rumored of the opinion that he had been arrestheld until the affair had been thoroughin trouble in Stavropol, my father in the city, her plots more or less fully would spare her to the last limit of his known, her liberty and indeed her life at the mercy of the governor general. And somehow this final sentence The thought of his own present helpseemed to ring true in Darrell's ears lessness weighed upon him like lead, and many a vow of vengeance he made with the name of Ivan Getchikoff as the escort a paper. This contained the Otherwise the journey was without incident, except that mysterious men the chief victim.

CHAPTER VII. A BAD JUDGE AND A GOOD JAILER.

ARRELL had been served with a good dinner, and on the spread a palatable breakfast, after which he was permitted to enjoy a cigar. This leniency augured well.

was the answer. "And Russia is not It had the look of mere brief detention, and if there had been no ques-"Thank God, America is not Russia," tion of Vera's safety he would have said Darrell. "If ever a man learns felt little anxiety. It was therefore a to love his country, it is when he appre- complete surprise to him when, about clates its liberties and regard for the 10 of the forenoon, he was sun moned rights of its people. Yet I anticipate to trial! The announcement was coldly made by the officer who had managed

"Pardon, colonel. By orders of his his arrest upon the previous evening. Darrell demanded counsel and was He insisted upon an interview with the official representative of his country and received the reply that his letter had been forwarded and that nothing "None, colonel; but we have orders more could be done. There was no alto arrest at once Sergius Bilowski, the ternative. He was forced to accept trial on the prosecutor's terms. He was led before a singular tribubare as a barn, and there were not a but the way to Siberia is long, and the oner, guards and clerks. A villainous symmetrical that he seemed to be made from the halves of two very different men that had been split longitudinally Getchikoff a paper. As he read it he acted as state's attorney. He charged the prisoner with being an escaped Siberian convict, Sergius Bilowski. His opening remarks were brief, and he "For heaven's sake, Getchikoff, tell galloped through them at such a gait one at a time, from an adjoining room. "For God's sake, you will only make They swore to the prisoner's identity princess was being taken away and it worse!" said Getchikoff. "Go with with such alacrity that three of them testified within five minutes. Darrell was not permitted to question them, but at the close of the farce he had a chance to testify in his own behalf. As if to make the proceedings perfectly fair, nobody questioned him. When he had said his say, the judge signed some documents, and the officer who had brought Darrell in received them.

"The prisoner will be taken to Gredtunity."

He then left the bench, vanishing through a door behind it. Darrell was led back to the room in which he had been previously confined. He was not fettered, and there was no added severity in the treatment of him except that an armed guard was placed within the room, a gigantic fellow with a good natured face, who sat on a stool tilted back against the door with a short gun, like a cavalry carbine, across his knees. Darrell had struggled to preserve his self command throughout the tragic don; "otherwise she would have sent has known me for ten years, as you are farce of the trial, well aware that the approval of his own sense of honor was If Getchikoff had any reply to make, all he had to hope for. He had mainhe was not permitted to utter it, for tained a calm demeanor from first to the police officer immediately com- last, and in his prison room he addressed his guard cheerfully.

"Where is this Gredskov?" he asked. "Gredskov," was the reply, with a Vera in the music room, but she was have no other, and I cannot remain in ance would have been a grotesque fol- sort of pitying grin, "is a prison city in active. This thing is eating the heart ly, and Darrell did not attempt it. He the Caucasian mountains. It is mainmarched away, surrounded by his cap- tained for the purpose of guarding the tors, who led him to a low, stone struc- captives taken among the rogues of ture fronting a public square of a the mountains-Circassians, robbers, mean appearance. Within this build- Turks or any of the bad men who seek you, Robert, to do everything that can ling he was brought before an official, to plot against the czar. Every three who heard the charge against him, months a prison train is made up for which was not properly an accusation, Siberia, where the prisoners are di-

Darrell's stay in Stavropol was short. The prisoner, indeed, declared his name On the following morning he was and nationality, but not the slightest placed with about a dozen other prisonthere are telegraph wires leading to attention was given to his words. The ers, all seemingly of the lowest type of whole proceeding did not occupy four peasants, and was conducted under a minutes, and it ended by the magis- strong guard to the city gate. He had not been dressed in any sort of prison mitment which was suspiciously handy garb and still retained his minor belongings and the money that the searchers had missed, but his hat had which was much more habitable than been replaced by a cap and his overhe had expected his prison to be-in- coat by a ragged garment that might deed, except for the basic injustice of have been a part of an officer's outfit

Outside of Stavropol the road was jected to search, but nothing was taken smooth for a considerable distance, and solved this puzzle by long study, "it from him except his watch, his pocket- the cavalcade moved slowly along small part of his money. The prin- have been prosperous comfort and cipal portion of his cash was in large wealth had it not been for the stagnation arising from the policy of the deputized government of Getchikoff.

At the end of the day's march they a genuine oversight on the part of the rested at a little post village. In the searchers-that they really did not see morning they again advanced and at the pocket. On the other hand, the night reached Glugiersk, on the main road leading to the pass over the Caucasus to Tiflis.

Darrell was treated with no more and no less consideration than any happen in the east. His traveler's other of the prisoners. To the officers checkbook was in his baggage, which, and soldiers of the escort he was simply the nihilist Sergius Bilowski, and no argument could make him anything

After leaving Glugiersk the way became more rugged, though the road itself was smooth and hard, traveled as that his letter would be delivered. He it was by the numerous trading caravans from north to south that crossed and recrossed the mountains.

Finally they reached Mozdok, where a stay of two days was made. Their next stopping place was Vladikaukas, on the upward slope of the steep mountain pass. Ten bours after leaving Vladikaukas, in the morning, the turrets of Gredskov could be seen.

Darrell knew nothing of Gredskov, and as none of the soldiers would talk for the most inrocent within its limits. to him and he was not allowed to speak to his fellow prisoners he could a long and tedious evening, Darrell was obtain no information in regard to it. But as the frowning battlements could ed as a mere precaution and would be be seen rising above the trees he noticed that the other prisoners became ly sifted; that Vera was also a prisoner more dejected, and their faces expressed a terrible fear.

It appeared, then, that Gredskov was a place to be dreaded.

At the gate of Gredskov the cavalcade was met by an officer, who halted the prisoners and took from the captain of list of names, and the two officers went over it together.

Even then Darrell was not allowed to speak, though he made a desperate attempt to tell the officer at the gate who he was.

Without ceremony he was taken from the column of prisoners, handed over morrow there was to fresh guards and rudely hustled into a low building that was built close to and under the city wall.

Here he was thrust into a dungeon that was floored with stone, walled with stone and roofed with stone. There was one little window, which opened high in the wall. Through this narrow aperture, when standing upon his table, he could see an esplanade, upon which regiments of the city's garrison sometimes paraded.

For a day or two Darrell cherished the hope that he would be returned to name and place." Stavropol, that the trick had been play ed to keep him out of the city at a crit-Two men had stopped before them informed that it was not customary. ical time when his intervention in Vera's favor might have inconvenienced the authorities, but as the time work on he began to realize that his view of the affair must be erroneous and that his liberty was lost forever unless he could win it back by his own hands.

While he fully realized the difficulties of his position, he did not despair. He knew that he was destined for Siberia, opportunities to escape must be many. The guard who controlled the door of Darrell's dungeon was a young Russian named Kevski. Accepting for granted the story of Sergius Bilowski that came with the prisoner bearing that name, he had treated Darrell with a sternness that forbade any attempt at conversation, but they were brought into more friendly relations by a singular happening.

"Where is this Gredskov?"

One evening, when Darrell was watching through his window the evolutions of an unusually large force upon the esplanade, he was astounded to perceive Ivan Getchikoff mounted upon a horse and wearing the uniform of a brigadier. Evidently the rascal had enjoyed recent promotion. Surrounded by his staff, he took up a position within fifty years of Darrell's window, and the troops passed before him in review.

With no clear notion of the usefulness of the proceeding, but desiring to make his presence known to Getchikoff, Darrell repeated that imitation of the flute which had so surprised Ladislov in the Parisian cafe. The sharp sound reached Getchikoff's ears, and isfaction of witnessing the nervousness of his enemy, and he was piping lustily when he heard the creaking of the door behind him. He snatched the big pen (not, of course, a necessary part of the musical performance) from his pocket has been taken. Russian rule is broand turned to face Kevski, the guard. "Where did you get a flute?" demanded Kevski. "I have had it in my pocket all along," said Darrell. "It is not exactly a flute. It is an American instrument. "Why were you permitted

"My friend," said Darrell, who had was safer to let me carry my own propetr out of Stavronol than to leave behind. When prisoners' goods are ordered to be destroyed, they have a habit of turning up again, as you are aware. And mine would prove me an American."

"You are not a Russian; I know that," responded Kevski. "Is your name really Sergius Bilowski?"

"It is not. My name, my friend, is Darrell. I am an American." Kevski seemed to be impressed. "America! Ah! That is the place!"

he said. "They have no prisons there!" "Oh, hold on now! They do have prisons. We are not all angels," said Darrell. "And prisons are necessary in every land. But in America one must commit a crime to be sent to prison." "I know, 1 know," said Kevski, eager to display his knowledge of the distant land of freedom. "My cousin, Andrea Kevski, is there. He wrote me a letter once. He is now a merchant, and his children go to school. He sits every Sunday in a church, and no inspector of police searches his house in his absence. It is a great country, that Amer-

"It is, indeed," said Darrell. "I wish it could know where I am. I think Stavropol would be treated to a sensation.'

"Hush! My cousin says that in America your people treat our people with to search for Vera among her mother's friendship. He says that it is a great people. country, where railroads go every day, that many of our people have large farms, and the taxes are so light that they can save money. Is it so?"

many Russian villages in our great west." "So. That is what my cousin called

"I think so. I know that there are it, but I know little of these things. Could I get to America?"

"Well, if it was really an object and I got out of here, I think you might reach America." Kevski seemed to think that the conversation had gone far enough in this direction. He suddenly asked to see the musical instrument, which he examined with childish wonder, making a laughable attempt to extort a tone from it. Then he returned it and hastily left the cell. That evening Darrell had a much better supper than usual. On subsequent occasions the conversation was resumed, and at last Kevski was led to a definite statement regarding the possibilities of escape. "It can be done," he said. "The officers of the prisoner trains do not care for persons. They convey only names. You are Sergius Bilowski. There are in Gredskov men who have lived in the north and whose friends are near the Urals. One can be found to take your "Very good. That gets him to Si beria. But what about me?" "You and I must find a way to get to America."

"We'll find it," replied Darrell; 'have no fear."

The days now passed less miserably Kevski proved to be a youth of intelligence, and the hours spent in telling him about America shortened the prison days for Darrell.

"Soon we shall be away from here," said Kevski one day when a month had been spent in the Gredskov pris-"Orders have come to form a prison train for Siberia."

"Are there many to go?" "Yes, many. You see, there is war in the Caucasus since you came to Gredskov. The Circassians have risen." "A revolt?" said Darrell. leads it?"

"A mysterious prince called Motman Khan. No one knows who he is. But he holds all the Circassians in his power. Prince Kilziar, the traitor, is one of the leaders also."

"Kilziar!" said Darrell. He fell to studying. What might this new turn of events mean to him? With the mysterious Motman Khan he had nothing to do, but Kilziar he would have given much to see, for undoubtedly Vera's fate must in some way be connected with this revolt of the Circassians. He even cherished the hope that she might have escaped the snares of the Getchikoffs and have joined the revolutionists in the field. That, indeed, would be bad enough, for the power of the Russian government could not be overthrown, and the fate of the leaders of such a revolt would surely be death. He had now a triple reason to desire freedom, and he prayed heaven that Kevski had planned

"The Circassians are coming," he said one day. "A small force that was sent from Stavropol to meet them has been cut to pieces. Motman Khan, the victorious prince, is on his way to Gredskov. There are here about 300 Circassians accused of one crime or another, all to be sent to Siberia. Motman Khan is coming to reduce the city and free his people.'

well. The man had become reticent and had begun to show traces of anxi-

"Tell me, Kevski," asked Darrell, "is there any word of a woman in this thing?

"Woman! Oh, no!" answered Kevski, staring. "Women do not lead regi-"Some of them might well do it.

You are sure there is no mention made of a woman's name?" "No." Kevski laughed. "The only name spoken is the name of Motman he recognized it. Darrell had the sat- Khan. He has a large army. It is armed with good guns and cannon. It was raised almost in a night, they say. Motman Khan is almost a god to his people. They worship him and follow him to death. Village after village ken in the mountains. Gredskov is sends us aid. His son was here to examine the defenses, but he left few men to re-enforce the garrison."

"We are doomed?"

"And what then, Kevski?" Kevski shrugged his shoulders. "Then we shall all be put to the sword. You may not be, for Motman Khan will not kill the prisoners. They are mostly his own people. He will give them all a chance to join his army." Darrell heard this with a leap of the heart. It was the chance he wanted. It would bring him within the Circassian lines and give him an opportunity was heard, and there was a commotion in the walled city. Kevski came to the dungeon pale with terror.

One day the booming of heavy guns

"We are doomed!" he cried. "There will be no America for me. Motman Khan is attacking the city with his army, and no help has come from Stavropol!"

"But we may escape and join Motman Khan," said Darrell. "Furies of hell!" cried Kevski. "That s the worst of it! The commander of the city. General Stanovitch, has issued kill all the prisoners and put all the prison guards under arms on the city wall."

"That's pleasant," said Darrell, "Are you to do the killing in my case?" "God! Do not scoff!" exclaimed Kevski, with white lips. "I mean what say! Hear the trumpets! The captain of the guard is coming! There is just |dog?' one chance for you! I risk my life to give it! Follow me!"

TO BE CONTINUED.

TIT FOR TAT.-Congressman Pue, of North Carolina, evidently believes in "fighting the devil with fire." He has introduced a resolution into the house which provides for raising a commitmittee to inquire into the use of boodle in the presidential and congressional elections of the last eight years, which is clearly a foil to the Crumpacker resolution to investigate the elections in the south, looking to the reduction of southern representation in the house, and brother has been eliminated from the query: "Can you tell me if this is the political equation in certain southern states in violation of the fifteenth ing at the bloomers. amendment. Pue's scheme is lex tail- am, its the way I wear mine.

onis with a vengeance. It cuts to the quick. Southern Democrats can stand investigation as to their election methods much better than Mark Hanna and his national committee or Mr. Babcock and his congressional committee.

Nobody with two ideas above a Hottentot doubts that the unprecedented use of boodle put the Republicans in power in 1897, and has kept them in power ever since. The amount of fat fried out of the national bankers, tariff barons, trust magnates and great corporations in 1896 has been variously estimted at from ten to fifteen millions. An investigation which would twist the exact truth and the whole truth out of Hanna and his confederates would be a public benefaction. We may never know the precise quantity of boodle used that year, but whatever it was the campaign of 1896 furnishes the only example on record where a national committee had a surplus left over after election, a surplus said to have been three millions. The nerve exhibited by Pue in thus bearding the lion in his den shows beyond all cavil that he is a young man with a future. Keep your optic on Pue, of North Carolina.-Champ Clark's Letter.

BACK TO HIS OWN.

Palma Left Cuba In Chains and

Returned as Ruler. General Tomas Estrada Palma, pres dent elect of the Cuban republic, who arrived on the steamer Admiral Farragut from old Point Comfort, Va., was greeted, says a Gibara, Cuba, dispatch of Tuesday, to the New York Tribune, with great enthusiasm. Gibara's population of 6,000 was augmented by as many more who came from all quarters of the island, from Havana to Santiago, to pay homage to man they love.

When the steamer anchored in Gibara harbor a salute o. 21 guns greeted General Palma. His face brightened at the scene before him. How different was his return to Cuba! He left in chains and came back with his path literally strewn with roses.

The harbor was a kalledoscope of color and animation. From every craft flew the flag of Cuba libre and the Stars and Stripes. Old friends who had known General Palma in the ten years' war and had chared with him the hardships and sufferings of many campaigns came on board and embraced him. Many were in tears. The vessel was soon crowded with members of committees, representing different cities, who came out in steamers and launches, which were decorated from stem to stern, from the mast to the waterline. After a quarter of an hour of informal talk, General Palma and his party were taken ashore in a launch. When he put his foot on the pier there were rounds of cheers by natives as they crowded around their president-elect, which could have been heard across the bay. Mayor Caspedes spoke a few words of welcome, then proposed three cheers for the first president of the Cuban republc. A procession was formed on the principal street, whence the presidentelect and members of the committee were drawn in carriages by a score of stalwart Cubans to the city hall. Every place of vantage along the route was filled. Men, women and children crowded and pushed to embrace and shake the hand of the veteran. General Palma sat with bared head, bowing in response to cheers. He was deeply affected by the demonstration. The ceremonies at the city hall consisted of speechmaking by the mayor, members of the council, General Palma and Gonzales de Quesada. Mayor Caspedes spoke eloquently of the gratitude that the Cuban people owed to General Palma, and the honor of being the first to receive the first chief executive of Cuba libre. His countrymen, he said, trusted General Palma implicitly and would aid in every way toward a successful administration of his of-

General Palma afterwards held a public reception, and was overwhelmed with congratulations and good wishes. He will resume his journey Monday evening. Holguin will be his next stopping place.

A WONDERFUL STORK .- "And why, may I inquire," said Senator Burrows to Senator Penrose, "did you introduce that amendment to the proposition to elect senators by the direct vote of the people?"

"Merely to make it more difficult" said Mr. Penrose.

"That reminds me," said Senator Depew, "of the Englishman who nad been at several club gatherings in this country where wits were assembled and thought it incumbent upon him to orders to the captain of the guard to do something for their entertainment next time they met. He sat down and with much labor composed a conundrum.

"Next time he got to the club he aired his production. "What is it," he asked, 'that has feathers, a long beak, builds its nest on chimneys, stands on one leg in the water and barks like a

"Nobody could guess. Then the Englishman gravely announced that the answer was 'a stork.' "'But, you bally ass,' one of the hearers said, 'a stork doesn't bark like

"'I know that,' he replied. 'I only put that in to make it more difficult." -Washington Letter in Philadelphia North American.

Joseph Jefferson, the actor, relates that in driving from Buzzard's Bay to Onset, Mass., he encountered a woman in bloomers who had dismounted from her bicycle and seemed to be in a quandary. She hailed him with the way to Wareham?" "The way to wear 'em?" repeated Jefferson, look-