General Merchandise.

Between-Season Pick-Ups.

We carry more stock than any other Yorkville store—more than any other Yorkville store. Come, look and see for yourself. We do not carry this large stock for the name of the thing; but in order that we may be able to supply the numerous wants of a multiplicity of customers. From our point of view a modern store is not complete unless it is able to supply a customer with everything he or she may want, and we are running a modern store. In the effort to have EVERYTHING FOR EVERYBODY, it is necessarily the case that we sometimes become overstocked. We count on this. Of course, we would rather be able to buy just what we need to supply the demands of the season with nothing left over; but that is impossible. It is beyond the range of human foresight. Realizing that we cannot have an oversupply of goods in various lines, the principal thing we try to guard against is not having enough. Rather than disappoint our customers, we make it a rule to have just a little more than we need to supply the demand. They have to be sold at a discount usually, whether they are disposed of now or held until next season, and this proposition brings us to the point.

Gentlemen's Clothing.

Up to the present time we have sold great piles of READY-MADE CLOTHING. There have been few people in our store during the whole season who have been disappointed in not being able to find something to suit them. Customers who understand what it means to carry such a stock as we carry, have told us frankly that they have never seen the like before. It has been frequently the case that we decide which he would prefer. To a very large extent we are still in that shape indicated by the foregoing. Prices are very much lower now than they have heretofore been this season. We desire to carry over a few goods as possible, and until the spring season opens this is the idea upon which we are running our business. We are now running profits now, and people who need new winter clothes can easily assure themselves of this fact by making an investigation.
