Why the Tortoise Won

Did you ever hear the true story of the race between the hare and the tortoise? Old Brother Terrapin told it to me one day as I lay on my back in the grass by the pond.

"Never heard the real truth of that victory of mine, did you?" he squeaked as he crawled up to me.

"No, never," said I. "How was it?" "Well, he laughed, "you see, they always supposed that I won that race by keeping on plodding along at my usual gait while old man Rabbit frisked around and fooled and wasted his time showing off' before the spectators.

"But it was nothing of that sort. Let me tell you at the start that all the plodding in the world without a little thought and common sense will never win anything. "You see, I had a little bone to pick with that 'yaller' dog of Bill Sikes' 'cause one day when I was asleep he turned me over on my back, and I didn't get my footing for two days and was nearly starved, to say nothing of the worry brought on the old lady and the children. So when Mr. Rabbit and started on that race that you've read of I knew at the start that I had no chance to win without some little game. Just then along comes Bill Sikes' 'yaller' dog. "'Mornin',' says he. 'Nice day for the race.' "'Yes,' says I, and if you want to see the start sit right down where you are, and you'll see a great show.' "So down he sat on his yaller tail and opened his yalier jaws and let his red tongue hang out. 'One, two, three go! says the starter, and just then saw my chance and grabbed Mr. Dog's tail between my jaws. He gave one yell of terror and surprise and set off through the woods toward the goal at lightning speed, pulling me through the air after him. My, but we did fly! And when we got near the goal I let go and walked the rest. Mr. Dog was so scared he ran on home. Served him right for turning me over. But I won the race.
