A Sewing Machine Story.

Mr. Bug—Why, hello Mr. Fly, where are you going? I thought you were down there in York county selling sewing machines to those good people. Couldn't you make it go?

Mr. Fly—Hello, Mr. Bug. Yes, I'm going home. I went down to York county expecting to sell a machine at every other house, and while I did sell a few machines, I found too many people who knew as much about buying machines as I did about selling them. As you know selling machines at $60 each is very much like selling gold brick—the buyer doesn't get anything like full value for the money spent. You see the machine I sell, the Stasind, costs at the factory with a big profit added, about $25. My expenses put on about steen dollars, and as I sold machines at about sixty dollars each, there was a good bunch of the long green to divide up among the district manager and overseer of agents and myself. But I could not sell enough. Of course I found some people who would buy my machine. I would start in with a little joke, get the ladies in a good humor, give 'em a little song and dance about how fine the Stasind machine is, how nicely finished, do a few fancy stiches, show 'em a beautifully lithographed guarantee certificate, and tell them the price. It seemed to me that if I could get 'em to thinking of the high price, the rest was easy. They'd go to thinking like this: "That guarantee is certainly nice, and the price is so high that the machine must be the best made. I believe I'll buy." In cases like this sales were easy. But there were too few people of this class. Most of the York county people are not so easy. You see the Strauss-Smith Company sells a splendid machine that will do as good work, run as light and last as long as the machine I sell, and their price is only $15 cash. They have sold about forty of these machines in different parts of the county, and every buyer is thoroughly pleased, and tells the neighbors about it, and when I ran across one of this kind of "neighbors" who have heard their neighbors talk about the Strauss-Smith Co.'s Machine, I just moved on as quickly as I could. And those people who didn't have neighbors who had bought Druid machines, have been reading the advertisements of the Strauss-Smith Co., in The Enquirer, and as the Strauss-Smith Co. is a reliable firm, people of course, believe what their advertisements say, and well they may, because so far as I am able to learn the machine is all they claim for it.

Mr. Bug—Well, what are you going to do? Mr. Fly—Oh, I am going down in Georgia where the people are easy to separate from their money. But honestly if I were going to buy a sewing machine, I would buy a DRUID for $15 from

The Strauss-Smith Company.
