

WORST IN 200 YEARS.

Terrible Earthquake Disaster in Italy and Sicily.

Later reports from southern Italy and Sicily, which were devastated by an earthquake last Monday, seem to leave no doubt of the fact that the number of dead is close in the neighborhood of 200,000 and that the disaster is the greatest that has occurred since the destruction of Jeddah, now Tokio, Japan, a little more than two hundred years ago, when about the same number of people were killed.

All the thickly settled country that forms the toe of the Italian foot, and all of northern Sicily was devastated. The territory includes the large cities of Reggio and Sella in Calabria, Italy, the cities of Messina and Milazzo in Sicily and scores of smaller towns and villages along the coast of Italy.

The first shock came early Monday morning while most of the people were in bed. There was the usual roaring, rumbling sound, then the trembling of the earth, followed by pitching and rolling, and violent upheavals in which great buildings went down as though built of sand.

Reports of the disaster yesterday had it that of the 45,000 people who live in Reggio, Italy, not a hundred survived, and in the whole of Sicily the death toll is now covered by the sea.

Immediately after the earthquake, fires broke out in the towns that were of reach of the submarine tidal wave, and there being no water or other means of checking the flames, the fires continued to burn as long as there was anything within reach of which they could feed.

As soon as possible after the disaster, warships of various countries hurried to the stricken territory, those of Great Britain and Russia arriving first, and immediately began work in such assistance as they could in rescue work. The sailors were able to save many people in the city of Messina who had been buried in the ruins.

Hundreds of wounded were put aboard ships and carried to Naples and other Italian ports.

The food supply of Messina and other stricken cities was completely destroyed and the panic of hunger soon added to the general distress. As soon as the cities of Italy and the balance of Europe realized this situation, they began to load ships with food and hurry them off to the people in distress.

Heavy subscriptions of money, headed by $400,000 from the king, are being raised in Italy, and the relief and rescue work generally is proceeding as rapidly as possible.

As was feared at the first, disease resulting from wounds, exposure and stench from dead bodies, has broken out in a widespread pestilence which seems to be almost certain. The first reported epidemics were of meningitis and pneumonia.

Almost before the ruins of Messina began to settle, ghoulies were out for plunder, robbing exposed goods and treasures and taking advantage of the confusion from the bodies of the dead and wounded. Soldiers, sailors and marines have been doing the best they could in preventing and arresting the marauders.

The channel of the strait of Messina between Italy and Sicily has been changed as the result of the upheaval as to baffle navigation and Mt. Etna, the great Sicilian volcano has broken out in renewed activity.

Although the tourist season has not yet fully opened, there were large numbers of Americans in Messina and Catania, and it is not doubted that many of these were killed in the destruction of the great tourist hotel at that place. Messina was one of the largest in Europe.

Worked Like a Man to Help the Stricken People.

Catania, Dec. 30.—King Victor Emmanuel and Queen Elena arrived at Messina today on board the battleship Vittoria-Emmanuele. They were greeted by a cheering throng and hurriedly made their way into the ruined city. As soon as it was known that the king and queen had come to the stricken city, the people gathered around the royal party, prostrating themselves in the mud and crying aloud for pity. This recognition was almost such for the queen who almost fainted.

Many terrible stories were told to the king in connection with the work of rescue. His majesty, however, lost little time in listening to a recital of difficulties. He immediately began planning with the royal party and nobles as unrelentingly as the others. He personally exhorted several injured persons lying in the ruins, and queen quickly recovered her courage and followed the example of her husband. She devoted her attention to the suffering children. She rescued with her own hands a little boy three years old, bleeding from many wounds and nearly dead, and carried him to the dock, where she handed him over to members of the hospital corps. At the dock were many small boats, and she took the wounded out to the ships in the harbor. Every available steamer in the port was being fitted up as a temporary hospital.

People wept from emotion when they saw the king and queen of Italy, and among them were many who had been abandoned under a beam that apparently had crushed his life, revived for a moment by a man who was greeting to the royal pair. He stretched out his hand and raised his head long enough to call out: "Swallow I can be happy. Long life to the King." He then fell back and expired.
