Democrats Are Split on Tariff.

At the opening of the extra session of congress the Democrats are divided when the tariff bill reaches them as to the best policy to pursue. They are a unit on the general principles that the tariff should be based on the demands of the government for revenue and protection and apparently if the Democrats themselves were in the majority and were framing a bill it would be along this line.

Some of them believe in proceeding upon this theory, even though the Republicans frame the bill. Others, coming from states in which there are large industries which have heretofore been the subject of protection, take the view that as the bill will, under any circumstances, be a protective measure, it is in the line of their duty to their constituents to exert their influence to the best protective measure possible in the new measure.

Senator Simmons of North Carolina is among the southern Democrats who take the position that southern products should be properly taken care of in a protective bill, and he will devote much attention to this matter, while, he apprehends will be vigorously attacked in the efforts to get new legislation.
