HUMANITY. Sentiments.

By humanity I understand the con cern men feel for the human species in general, for this single reason, that "Mrs. Raymond would think it they are men like themse ves, withblood, love or friendship.

It is just we should have a superio tenderness for a father, a wife, child or a friend; but there is a sort of affection which we owe to mankind as being members of same family, of which God is the Crefaintness of whose impression is in proportion to the largeness of their circumferance, till the last seems to escape from our sight. Here is an image of the different degrees of our affections. We love principally that which touches us the most nearly and less and less in proportion to the distance. We consider mankind with relation to us, as divided into different classes, every one of which increasing gradually, consists of greater numbers than the former; we place urselves in the smallest which is surrounded by others more extended and from thence we distribute to the different orders of men which they contain, different degrees of affection, more or less strong, in proportion to their distance from us in such a manner as that the last has hardly any share of it. These different classe may be ranked in the following order: a wife, children, relations, friends, men of the same religion: next are those of the same trade of profession as ourselves; the other classes comprehend our neighbors, fellow citizens and countrymen; the last, which incloses all the rest, the universal class of mankind. Pity, compassion and even forgive ness, when not inconsistent with prudence and our own safety, are due to our enemies.
