PREVIOUS TO APRIL 7, 1917

PREVIOUS to April 7, 1917, when the United States entered the war, there were absolutely no conditions attached to Mutual Benefit Life Insurance contracts except that the premium must be paid and the policy holder must not commit suicide within the first twelve months. At the end of 12 months the paying of premiums was the only condition. After war was declared an extra premium was charged on all policies, issued to men entering the army, but none on those issued previous to April 7, 1917. The extra premium was fixed at $37.50 per $1,000 for the first year, and notwithstanding for the first year, and notwithstanding the extra charge many millions of new insurance have been issued to men expecting to enter the service, and men expecting to enter the service, and who have entered.

The "War Clause" does not apply to policies where the applicant has passed his 46th birthday and as there are hundreds of men in this class "within the sound of my voice," who have NOT, up to this time made any adequate provision for the protection of their dependents after they have "gone west," or their own old age, I desire to say to them that there has never been a time since they were born when they could carry from three to twenty-five thousand dollars of gilt-edge Life Insurance—the Mutual Benefit Kind—more easily than right now. There has been no advance in the cost of Mutual Benefit insurance, and it has always led in LOW COST. There is no extra charge to the man under 46 until actually called into the service. The Mutual Benefit age limits are from 14 to 70 years. FEINSTEIN BARGAIN
