WOMAN LAWYER IN JAIL

Miss Collins Has Clients Come to Her There.

BARRISTER IS ACCUSED OF FORGERY

Has Many Friends and Many Enemies—Her Case to be Hard Fought—Former College President.

Miss Lula M. Collins, Pike county, barrister, formerly president of Pike college, is practicing law, these days from a cell in the Pike county, Missouri, jail, and preparing to defend herself against her accusers and the Pike county bar.

Miss Collins has been in jail three weeks in default of $2,500 bond, charged with forgery and with uttering and selling a forged instrument. It is alleged, in an information procured by Rufus L. Higginbotham, prosecuting attorney, on the complaint of Daniel Grimes, a negro, that September 15, 1920, she forged a promissory note for $500 purporting to be signed by Grimes and his sister, Sarah Smith, to the order of Ida Burrus.

Victor E. Smith, chairman of the grievance committee of the Pike county Bar association, is assisting in the prosecution.

Receives Clients In Cell. As she sits in her cell with her law books at hand, her clients come and go. She gives attention to the details of cases pending at Bowling Green and Louisiana, and is preparing to file petitions for the ensuing term of court.

Former friends, who might qualify as bondsmen, have not done so, but there has been no lapsing of the loyalty of the lowly, whom chiefly she has served, nor dwindling of the devotion of Miss Willa Nora Mitchell, formerly county superintendent of schools, friend and companion of Miss Collins through years.

The dilemma which has befallen Miss Collins has drawn renewed interest to the remarkable attachment of these two women for each other. Both were born at Louisiana. Their families were neighbors and friends. They grew up together, went to school together and were graduated from the same high school. Both became teachers. Miss Collins, older by several years than Miss Mitchell, also studied law.

Formerly Head of Pike College. Miss Mitchell was elected county superintendent and held that office for fourteen years. In 1907, Miss Collins became head of Pike college, a co-educational institution of Bowling Green. Miss Mitchell was associated with her in conducting it and, both lived at the college. In 1916, they sold the college and it was converted into a high school.

Miss Collins then took up the practice of law, opening an office in the Phoenix building with rooms adjoining those which she and Miss Mitchell occupied as living quarters, taking their meals out or doing light house-keeping there.

Among the most intimate friends of Miss Collins and Miss Mitchell has been Mrs. Burrus. Miss Collins has aided her in placing some loans and when, as she says, Miss Collins went to her and told her that Daniel Grimes, an aged negro owning one hundred acres of land, wanted to borrow $500, Mrs. Burrus consented to lend it to him. The note, which Miss Collins bought bore what purported to be the signature of Sarah Smith and Grimes' mark, attested by F. A. Davis. At the expiration of the ninety days, Mrs. Burrus says Miss Collins went to her and told her that Grimes on account of the bad roads, could not get into town, and obtained a three weeks' extension. Later Mrs. Burrus heard that Miss Collins had collected $100 on another loan in the same neighborhood and had not accounted for it, so she made an inquiry and was informed by Grimes and Mrs. Smith that they had made no note and had received no money. Davis said he had not attested the instrument.

Secured by Minnesota Notes. Meantime, Miss Collins had given to Mrs. Burrus, as collateral, two $2,000 notes, secured by deed of trust, on property in Minnesota, purporting to be signed by Silas King. Mrs. Burrus has received a letter signed "Silas King, by A. Fay King" denying that he executed the notes and professing ignorance of the papers. The Minnesota property was inherited by members of the Parsons family of Bowling Green. They sent Miss Collins to Minnesota to look it over for them. She bought the property from them and, according to information received from a Minnesota land registrar, sold it to King.

The prisoner said today that the Pike County Bar association was prosecuting the case and that although under the law she was entitled to be represented by counsel, no lawyer was preparing to defend her.

She quoted a lawyer as saying: "We've got her where we want her now."

She refused to talk about the charge against her and the Minnesota collateral and other details mentioned. "It would be entirely out of line," she said, "to discuss a transaction which is the basis of the pending proceedings. The truth will come out at the trial."

Evening Post. Each was morbid, unhappy and not very successful. Then they married.

Co-operation and laughter ruled their home and they have made one million dollars.

A. I. Root, known in fifteen languages as "Root, the Bee Man," is eighty-three years old. When a youth he was laughed at because he couldn't stick to any one job.

He tried seventy-four different occupations and then became an inventor. Then he tried watch-making and developed into a jewelry salesman.

"The big thing is to find out what you are best suited for, and then go to it with every ounce of strength in your body," he says.

James M. Boutwell made his success where most of his fellows missed theirs—at home. He is known as the "Green Mountain Granite King of America" and lives in Montpelier, Vt.

Farmer boy, mechanic's assistant, coal shoveler on a freight engine, he was "let out" of one position after another, because of lack of attention and awkwardness.

James R. Langdon, one of the shrewdest men of his day in New England, tried to develop the granite at the town of Barre. He failed.

Boutwell asked Langdon for a chance, got it, and in five years blasted $200,000 worth out of a $600 cow pasture.

AUDUBON AT LIBERTY HALL

Visit of Famous Naturalist to South Carolina Recalled.

Dr. Bachman's letters, which have been quoted before in this column contain much of interest to South Carolina sportsmen. Here is an excerpt from Bachman's biography describing a visit made by Audubon, the great naturalist, in 1836 to Liberty Hall:

"The plantation of Dr. C. Desel, his hospitable home, Liberty Hall, Goose Creek, near Charleston, was a favorite resort for the friends. It is a cold night in December. Let us throw back the heavy chintz curtains and look within. C-eat blazing logs are in the open fireplace, lighting up the whole room. The antlers of deer captured in the chase adorn the walls. The hunters seated around the fire are jubilant over the splendid luck of the day.

"It is an interesting, happy group before us; Audubon with his massive forehead and his waving dark hair—slightly touched with gray—worn long, and flowing over an ample white collar; his nose aquiline; his mouth well formed, and his beautiful eagle eye full of animation. Bachman, with his noble countenance and genial flow of thought and word. Mr. Edward Harris, the tall, refined, cultivated gentleman. Dr. Wilson, as trim as shiny boots and well brushed coat could make a successful practitioner. John W. Audubon, with his compact, well developed body and his handsome face—brimful of fun. Today he has killed his first deer and, according to ancient usage, was blooded—that is, was marked on the face with the warm blood of the newly killed deer—a ceremony decidedly more enjoyable to the old hunters than to the one undergoing the ordeal. They have already partaken of a substantial supper, and are talking over the sport and triumph of the day. Two noble bucks and a doe have been brought home, swung across the front of the saddles."—Charleston News and Courier.
