

PEG-LEG GRAHAM.

Noted Confederate Veteran About to Pass.

Rob Graham (Peg Leg) is lying at the point of death at Rutherfordton, N. C., and the Charlotte Observer of last Tuesday published a message from him to this effect:

"It is about over with me. I'll soon be gone. I want to be buried at Sharon in the uniform that the Daughters of the Confederacy gave me, and I want my Sunday-school class to be present at the funeral. I have no further desire now except to be 'put away all right.'"

Referring to this message the Observer of Wednesday has the following editorial:

"OLD BOB"

"As a matter of course Peg Leg Graham's friends will see that he is 'put away all right.' He will be shrouded for his final sleep in the bright new uniform of the Daughters of the Confederacy at Sharon gave him, and of which he was so proud, and his chair in the council hall of the Confederate Veterans in Charlotte will be tilted to the table; and to be sure his Sunday school class will be assembled at the grave to do the last honors. His expressed desire to have these pupils present at the last ceremonies, recalls one of the happiest cases in 'reformation' on record. Bob Graham went to the war a militant soldier. He believed in action and he was always in action. He was hardened and made reckless under experiences of the war and he came home transformed into a rampant citizen. He had left a leg in Virginia, and he went thumping through life with one of these clumsy hickory contrivances which became a common equipment with the Confederate veteran. He did not affect the cork leg, because he preferred something that the Yankees had not made. And also, during the days of Reconstruction his hickory leg gave convenient service as a weapon. On one occasion, at a time when the scalawags and cam, followers were inciting the negroes in Charlotte to riot and had collected them in a hall over a bar-room on Tryon street, where they were being groomed for an outbreak of violence against the whites and when nobody appeared to know what move to make in common defense of the town, Peg Leg undertook to handle the situation on his own hook. After he had thoroughly primed himself for the job, he mounted his horse and went clattering up the stairway and into the hall, where he galloped around, his hickory leg sticking out like the blade of a scythe and operating in pretty much the same manner. The hall was cleared in short order and all danger of an 'uprising of the blacks' had been permanently averted.

"But the causes for strenuous activities of the kind were gradually removed and Col. Bob, Graham relapsed into the ways of peace and conservatism, the only thing that could draw him away from his farm being the political meeting. There was always a whooping-up of things when Peg Leg was on hand—and it was a mighty uninteresting occasion when he was not among those present. It was about 10 years ago that he suddenly accepted the serious view of life and shortly thereafter, friends making inquiry about the infrequency of his visits to town, learned that he had 'joined the church,' and had become interested in Sunday school work, beginning as member of a class and rising to leadership. The boast of his later life was his Sunday school class, the same which he had hoped will be on hand to see him 'put away all right.' In later years, also, his mind dwelt seriously on the river over which he was soon to 'cross.' That is the favorite way with the Confederate veteran of speaking of his anticipated reunion with Stonewall Jackson. The day is close at hand when Peg Leg Graham will 'cross over the river and rest under the shade of the trees.' How many of his glorious comrades he must have had in mind when he gave expression to the thought! They will be waiting for him, no doubt, and we may imagine the joyous illumination of his face as he goes forward to meet them. He will find, as so many thousands who have gone before him have found, that the last reunion is the soldier's dream fulfilled, where all burdens are dropped away and it is for them the crown and the hallelujah!

Governors of Federal Reserve Board Have Proved Incompetent.

When the Federal Reserve System broke every solemn pledge that had been made to bond buyers and began its campaign of deflation, the Manufacturer's Record said that faith of the people of the country in the integrity of the whole banking system would be shaken as it had not been for many years and that it would not be possible to rebuild in the American people a faith such as that they had previously held in the honor and integrity of the treasury department, the Federal Reserve System and the banks, for a long time to come.

Unfortunately that statement is being literally fulfilled.

Among recent conferences in Washington was one which sought to bring about increased credit facilities for the cattle men of the southwest. A well informed man, in touch with what is going on there, in the course of a letter to the Manufacturer's Record writes as follows:

"Eugene Meyer objected to the Harding plan for $50,000,000 for the relief of the livestock industry through the War Finance Corporation. He wanted to know, and so did senators, why this money could not be got right through the Reserve System. Mr. Mellon said that he did not know why either, but that he had urged the banks in the middle west over and over again to make the loans and they declined. He brought out a list of banks which he said had an unused borrowing power with the Reserve System of about $47,000,000 and they declined, despite any pressure whatever, to utilize it. He said he did not know why. A senator said he did not know why and spoke as follows: "Two or three years ago you gentlemen in the treasury called in bankers at various times and in connection not only with Liberty bonds, but also with commodities, you advised and encouraged these banks to make very liberal loans. They did so, and eighteen months ago you, in utter violation of all the pledges and promises, notified these banks that they were carrying frozen credits and that they must liquidate instantly. Is it any wonder, therefore, if when you now tell banks that the Federal Reserve System will take care of their loans, they view you as people whose word is not to be trusted and on whose pledges no reliance whatever can be placed?"

"Now catch the point. When the treasury undertook to guarantee to mid-west bankers that these notes for the aid of the livestock industry would be renewable six months hence, the mid-west bankers would not trust the assurances. There might be a different secretary of the treasury in six months and he might say that the previous secretary had no right to make promises. But these mid-west bankers were perfectly willing to come along on the same proposition identically, under the leadership of Mr. Morgan, because they have every confidence that when Mr. Morgan comes to demand performance at the end of the six months, he will get performance."

What a fearful condition of incompetence and dishonor is here indicated when the statement of a private banker is accepted in preference to the statement of the U. S. treasury department and of the Federal Reserve Banking System!

Until President Harding removes from office the men responsible for bringing about this complete loss of credit in the faith and honor of the treasury department as it was operated under Houston and of the Federal Reserve Board as managed during the last few years, there cannot be any restoration of confidence in this country. If President Harding will show to the business men and the bankers of the country that men responsible for the breaking down of the nation's honor and of the honor of the banking system of the country cannot remain in office, he can rebuild confidence in the integrity of the treasury department under Secretary Mellon, and of the Federal Reserve System under an entirely new board of management. President Harding cannot act too quickly in making this change. Every day's delay intensifies the lack of confidence of the country and the belief that the dishonor of the Federal Reserve System by mismanagement is not treated as seriously by the administration as it should be.—Manufacturer's Record.

Side Application of Fertilizer Pays

When the right kind of fertilizer is used and the application is made early in the growth of the crop, a side application gives good profits. For the best results the fertilizer used for side application must furnish quick acting nitrogen in a lasting form. For ease of application and for uniform results the fertilizer must be dry and free of hard lumps.

ARCADIAN Sulphate of Ammonia

Arcadian Sulphate of Ammonia is the ideal side-dressing fertilizer. It contains 25 units of ammonia. One hundred pounds contains as much ammonia (or nitrogen) as 135 pounds or more of any other side-dressing fertilizer. The ammonia is all soluble, quick acting and yet is lasting in its effect. Arcadian is also fine and dry. There are no hard lumps and it can be applied easily and evenly by hand or by machine.

As Arcadian is now low in cost per unit of plant food, it is the growers' best buy for side-dressing purposes.

Arcadian is for sale by YORK SUPPLY CO., York, S. C. J. F. PURSLEY, Clover, S. C. ROCK HILL FERTILIZER CO., Rock Hill, S. C. For free bulletins on the proper use of Arcadian, address

WORKER SUES UNION

Holds Labor Organization Responsible for Loss of His Job.

The eyes of organized labor were today turned upon Chattanooga, Tenn., where a lawsuit has been instituted that may have wide effect.

William Felton, a former employe of the Southern railway, is suing the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen for damages in the sum of $5,000. Felton claims that the defendant caused him to lose his position. The suit is believed to be without precedent and because of its nature is expected to draw nationwide interest.

Two questions are involved in the suit. They are:

Has a non-union laborer, who has lost his job at the instance of organized labor, any remedy at law? Can an incorporated labor organization be sued for monetary damages resulting from the loss of a plaintiff's position through its efforts?

Should a verdict against the labor union be returned, the closed shop question would be greatly affected, it was believed here.

Felton alleges that he is a former employe of the Southern Railway company, having been working as a switchman. His declaration alleges that he worked for the company for

Practical Thrift---

AN EMINENT WRITER on the practical every day affairs of life says: "No man has reason to say he cannot be thrifty, cannot protect himself and those who must look to him for protection. It is his humble opinion that the life insurance companies have contributed more sound sense to the system of saving and the plan of procuring protection than all the banks east and west of the banks of the Mississippi." Thrift, as taught by the insurance companies, preserves the outstanding independence in American citizenship.

The Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company of Newark, N. J., has been the leader in promoting and teaching thrift in the United States since 1869, and the man of whom you wish to investigate its standing, record for square dealing and policy contracts will make a serious mistake, and one that will cause regret later.
