

Trip lightly over trouble, Trip lightly over wrong: We only make grief double By dwelling on it long. Why clasp woe's hand so tightly? Why sigh o'er blossoms dead? Why cling to forms unsightly? Why not seek joy instead? Trip lightly o'er sorrow, Though all the day be dark, The sun may shine to-morrow, And gaily sing the lark. Fair hope has not departed, Though roses may have fled, Then never be down-hearted, But look for joys instead. Trip lightly o'er sadness, Stand not to rail at doom, We've pearls to string of gladness, On this side of the tomb. Whilst stars are nightly shining, And heaven is over head; Encourage not repining, But look for joy instead.

A Touching Tale for the Times.

Among the broad savannas of Attakapas, in the palm days of antebellum, there dwelt in blissful quietude two young creatures, who, though their complexion resembled the glittering ebony, were blessed with hearts as pure in feeling as the icicles of the Arctic. From the earliest childhood this Ethiopian Paul and Virginia conceived for each other the tenderest affection. Hand in hand they rambled through the forest of cane. From the same stalk they imbibed the delicious juice of the succulent plant, and with the same spoon fed on its daintiest products. No cruel master forced them to the weary field of toil. The ruthless overseer, hard hearted though he was, felt touched at the depth and purity of their regard, blindly passed over their many acts of juvenile thoughtlessness, and mercifully spared their soft young backs from the pitiless lash. As the years rolled on, Paul became endowed with all the noble qualities of the young man glorying in his strength, while the blushing Virginia, bursting like the flower into a fuller loveliness, expanded to a blooming, fascinating womanhood. The guileless love of childhood warmed to passion, as the cool morning melts in the brilliant lustre of meridian. The ramblings by gurgling water brooks, the sweetness of the evening walks in the moonlight, no longer brought that enchantment, as in the early days when the clear depths of their yet lucid souls were first touched with the rappings of strange joy. Marriage, that silken band that forever would make them bone of each other's bone, and flesh of each other's flesh, was the only soothing balm that would ease the painful achings of those devoted hearts. The venerable parents were consulted, and with smiling faces and merry jokes, four willing affirmatives were given to the blissful pair. The cup of happiness was filled to overflowing. All earthly desire was at an end. Alas! alas! "The best laid plans of mice and men, gang aft aglee." Grim-visaged war, bursting with all the hot blood of party spirit and sectional hatred, descended on the peaceful land like a thunderbolt; thousands of happy homes were desolated, the air was filled with the wails of the afflicted. Buckling on his armor, Paul boldly placed himself in the ranks. Who shall describe the woeful parting? Who can picture the pallid, tearful, fainting, heart-broken Virginia; the proud, but despairing Paul? Who can number the vows of eternal fidelity, the cries of keen anguish, the wild burst of woe, that heaven witnessed as they tore themselves apart. Into the thick of it, through swamps and mire and bloody fields, over breastworks and batteries belching forth their leaden hail, amid the cheers of the victors, the groans of the wounded, the shrieks of the dying, for three long years the brave Paul marched. No fatigue was too arduous, no suffering too appalling for that sturdy heart. Virginia lived within his breast, her name was breathed by the parched lips, and he was strong again. Three long years of suffering, and dove-eyed Peace spread her snowy wings over the unhappy land. Ah, what was the joy that reigned within his bosom? With what delight did the war-worn veteran lay down his well-used firelock, to depart for the home of his childhood. Time had wrought many changes, but what time could change Virginia? With a palpitating heart Paul landed in the Crescent City. Another day would transport him to these loving arms. Oh, luckless wight! Faithless Helena was not limited to the age in which Troy flourished or fell. On an excited race to the Paymaster's office, who should cross the path of the bewildered soldier but the identical Virginia, mirable dictu! accompanied by a stalwart son of toil, bearing within his arms a miniature copy of the fair on-slave. The crushing intelligence soon found voice. For years she had long and anxiously waited his return. As bulletins arrived containing the dread particulars of bloody strife, her loving breast burned with desolating anxiety. Hundreds of his comrades returned triumphant, yet he came not. In a moment of despair, another suitor presented his dusky proportions. She refused—he came again; she reflected; the admirer still pressed his suit. "When a woman stops to consider she's lost!" Her fate proved the truth of the aphorism. With the spirit of another Gissippus, the noble hearted lover forgave his more fortunate rival, and with tears of affectionate regard accepted the invitation to visit his residence. Smothering his great sorrow, Paul like another Enoch Arden, determined at once to surrender all claims, and to the end of life to play the devoted friend of his family. "Man proposes, God disposes." Scarcely had a fortnight passed over the then state of affairs ere the green-eyed monster began to swell and rage within the breast of the happy husband. Hundreds of little attentions bestowed in a most platonic manner on the fair Virginia, were construed into evidence of decided ill-faith. Little by little the airy nothings led the burning spirit, until at length, driven to a frenzy, he forcibly ejected the author of so much unhappiness from the protection of his roof. Paul, indignant at the unheard-of cruelties to the object of his life-long affections, gladly availed himself of the opportunity to offer her his protection. Kindness so disinterested could not pass unappreciated. At the risk of reputation the generous proposition was accepted, and with hearts softened by affliction, they determined to devote the remainder of their lives to each other's welfare. Yesterday, to their horror and dismay, the malignant husband had both arrested, charging them with feloniously appropriating several articles of wearing apparel which, he states, are part and parcel of his wardrobe. Last night was passed by the wretched pair in one of the cells of a city lock-up.—New Orleans Times.

A Strange Story.

In 1847, a young physician, who had just graduated at the Missouri State University, and returned to his home in Illinois to practice his profession, led to the altar a lady who had won his love. The young physician, with that professional ardor which burns so brightly in the heart of all students, had on his return home procured a "subject" or cadaver, for dissection, by desecrating the village graveyard. By some means this fact became known, and a warrant was issued for his arrest, and placed in the hands of an officer to serve, which he did in a few moments after the marriage supper was performed. The crime being a felony, the bridegroom's position may readily be imagined to have been extremely unenviable, and the prospects of a prison cell being anything but agreeable, he determined to make his escape. The officer having granted him the privilege of saying a few words in private to his bride, he retired with her to a room, bade her farewell, jumped from the window and escaped. He was pursued for many days, but finally managed to elude his pursuers, and settled in Missouri. A year later he wandered into New Mexico, and from thence, in the course of a few years, he found his way into California. During his wanderings he had failed to correspond with his wife, and she, believing him dead, married again. After a time he learned this fact, but determined to remain dead to her, and it was not until a few months ago he altered his determination. Happening to pick up a paper published in one of the Western cities, he read an account of the death of the husband of his wife, and knowing her to be free, he wrote to her, stating that he "still lived," and cherished her memory as green as when he kissed her lips in parting nineteen years ago. He told her that he was still free, and asked her to come and enjoy with him the fortune he had accumulated. The wife widow received the letter, and while she read the early love returned, and she determined to join him. Disposing of her property, she, with a daughter twelve years of age, took passage for California, where they arrived on Thursday last, and were met on the wharf by the old husband, who conducted them to the Cosmopolitan Hotel, where they remained till a license was procured and a minister remarried the parties; after which they proceeded to the house that had been prepared for them, and where they, on Thursday evening, entertained quite a number of friends. Truly, the incidents of real life are more startling and romantic than the wildest fancies of the romancer.—San Francisco Californian.

We extract the following items of interest from the Columbia Carolinian of last Thursday:

THE FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.—Among the visitors in Columbia at the present time, are Major General J. B. Steedman and General J. S. Fullerton. Accompanying the above named officers, are Colonel McCloskey, and Messrs. T. R. Davis, of Harper's Weekly, E. P. Brooks, of the New York Times, and H. C. Clarke, of the New York Herald.

The first named gentlemen have been commissioned by the proper authority to visit the principal cities of the South, from Virginia to Texas, learn the condition of the Freedmen's Bureau, ascertain its uses and abuses, and report accordingly. We are informed that they have already seen enough in Virginia and North Carolina to induce a report to Washington recommending that the Bureau in those States be promptly abolished. From the searching character of their investigation, and the earnestness of effort, they are putting forth to discover fraud and oppression, we presume a similar report will result from their visit to South Carolina. There is certainly a wide field of discovery here. If the entire truth could be gleaned, President Johnson would not hesitate one moment in withdrawing the last vestige of an institution that has entailed misfortunes on white and black, ever since it was established in the South.

The correspondents above named, were in the Federal army, and like all true soldiers will bear testimony before the country, that the much detested South through which they are journeying, is in reality more fit for the Union than those portions of the North which are represented by such men as Stevens, Sumner, and their radical clique.

FUNERAL OF GENERAL GIST.—The remains of General Gist, one of the noblest sons of the State of South Carolina, and one of the most valiant spirits of the late struggle, arrived here by the South Carolina train last night. The name of this dead soldier is among those to which history at present can do but incomplete justice; but the honor which he won is a living thing; and if never recorded anywhere else, it will be found written in lasting characters upon the hearts of his countrymen of the South. Long hence it will be a subject of mournful pride to the people of Columbia that his heroic dust has been laid in their midst.

OUR RUINS.—We are happy to learn that the idea which we suggested yesterday, as to the photographing of the ruins of Columbia, had already been conceived and is immediately to be carried into execution by an artist of this city. Mr. Wearn has obtained a machine on wheels, which will enable him to take at perfect ease, and from the most advantageous points, all the interesting features to which we referred. In forming such a design and in providing so admirable an instrument for the purpose, Mr. Wearn has approved himself both a man of enterprise and taste.

Scraps, Facts and Fancies.

—"I'm very much pressed for time," as the man said when his wife hugged and kissed him to coax a gold watch out of him.

—A Philadelphia paper remarks "one half of the postmasters recently appointed in the Southern States are women."

—If a draft of five hundred dollars requires a two cent revenue stamp, how much will a draught of ale require? —An Irishman was challenged to fight a duel, but declined on the plea that he did not wish to leave his old mother an orphan.

—A negress speaking of her children, said of one whiter than the rest, "she could not bar dat ar chile, kase he show dirt so easy."

—A widow out West married a man to whom she refused her daughter, because, she said, her first husband was an ugly critter, and she had learned how to manage such cattle. Kind mother.

—A female correspondent of the St. Louis paper, speaks of a sight she saw lately that made her smack her lips. It seems a pity that the ladies in that city have to smack their own lips. In this latitude men are always ready to save them that trouble.

—A little keen, bright eyed girl of four years, on a visit one evening, was being helped to the knee of a gentleman friend, and on being told by her mother that she was too large a baby to hold, retorted almost immediately, accompanying her words with an emphatic gesture: "Why, girls nineteen years old sit on laps, and you wouldn't call them babies would you?"

—"I want to buy a sewing-machine," said an old lady, entering a shop. "Do you wish a machine with a feller?" inquired the clerk, "Sakes, no; don't want any of yer fellers looking for me."

—A coarse-looking fellow went up to an old gentleman, and holding out his hand, remarked with a smile: "My dear sir, I cannot call you by name, but I am sure we have been together somewhere."

"We may have," said the old gentleman, "for I have been in some very bad company in my days."

—A cobbler, at Paris, who attended the public disputations, was asked if he understood Latin. "No," he replied; "but I know who is wrong in the argument!" "How?" asked his friend, "Why by seeing who is angry first."

—Sambo was hacking at a tough oak, when lightning struck a tree near him, and slivered it. "Bress de Lord!" said he, "I jes like to see um try dis one; I reckon dey find dere match!"

—An old lady, who had insisted on her minister's praying for rain, had her cabbages cut up by a hail storm, and, on viewing the wreck, remarked that she "never knew him undertake anything without overdoing the matter."

—If you would find a great many faults, be on the look out. If you would find them in still greater abundance, be on the look in.

—"We may be right or wrong in our choice of a hero, but the enthusiasm which takes us out of ourselves, and costs us something, must do some good.

—"Why will you persist in wearing another woman's hair on your head?" asked Acid of his wife. She retorted, "why will you persist in wearing other sheep's wool on your back?"

—A pretty girl said to Leigh Hunt, "I am very sad you see." He replied, "Oh, no; you belong to the other Jewish set; you are very fair, I see."

—If a man empties his purse into his head no man can take it from him. An investment in knowledge always pays the best interest.

—A printer, who became a physician, gave as a reason for the change, that in printing, all the faults are exposed to the eye; in physic, they are buried with the patient.

—"A merchant died suddenly after writing a letter to one of his correspondents. His clerk wrote at the bottom, "Since writing the above I have died," and sent the letter.

—A farmer refused to hire an Irishman, because two previously hired by him had died on his hands. "Faith," said he, "I have wrought in many a place, and never once played sich a trick."

—An old sailor objected to the proposed invention of an India-rubber ship, because it would rub out all the lines of latitude and longitude, to say nothing of the equator.

—The ladies of Raleigh, N. C., recently proposed to organize an association, of which the oldest member should be the president and the youngest the secretary. But the dear creatures soon met with an unexpected and insurmountable difficulty, and the project has been abandoned, it having been found impossible to obtain a president, and every one of the members claiming the right to be secretary.

—Mr. and Mrs. Brewer, of Kentucky, have twenty-two children. This is the most extensive broodery in the West.

—A Yankee witness in court described a hog as having no particular ear-marks, except a very short tail.

—After quoting from John Locke, that a blind man took his idea of scarlet from the sound of a trumpet, a witty fellow says that a hoop skirt hanging out of a shop door reminds him of the peel of a belle. —A bashful youth was paying his addresses to a gay lass of the country, who had long despaired of bringing things to a crisis. He called one day when she was at home alone. After settling the merits of the weather the girl said, looking slyly into his face: "I dreamed of you last night." "Did you? why—now?" "Yes, I dreamed that you kissed me." "Why, now! what did you dream your mother said?" "Oh, I dreamed she wasn't at home!" A light dawned on the youth's intellect, a singular sound broke the stillness, and in less than four weeks they married.

A Western farmer, who wished to invest the accumulation of his industry in United States securities, went to Jay Cooke's office to procure the Treasury notes. The clerk inquired what denomination he would have them in. Having never heard the word used except to distinguish the religious sects, he after a little deliberation, replied: "Well, you may give me a part in Old School Presbyterian, to please the old lady; but give me the best on't in Free Will Baptist."

A club is being formed in Paris called the Club of Science. The rules are that not a word is to be spoken in the club by members or attendants. Eating, drinking, smoking and reading will be allowed, but nothing else. Of course, there are no lady members.

RICE CROP.—Dr. Irving, on the Cooper river, South Carolina, writes very discouragingly of the coming rice crop. He thinks the production of that region will be about the same as last year. He adds: "Before the negroes were emancipated, the annual production of Cooper river was about twenty thousand tonnes of rice, averaging six hundred and twenty-five pounds a tierce; but last year, the first season a crop was planted by employment of free labor, not more than eight hundred tierces were made—a sad falling off, indeed."

This is the story of Jamaica over again. THE PRINTER'S LOVE.—A poetical typo thus expatiates: "We love to see the blooming rose, in all its beauty drest; we love to hear our friends disclose the emotions of the breast. We love to see the cars arrive, well laden at our door; we love to see our neighbors thrive, and love to bless the poor. We love to see domestic life with uninterrupted joys, we love to see a happy wife with lots of girls and boys. We love all these—yet far above all that we have ever said, we love what every printer loves, to have subscription paid."
