Agricultural Societies.
The citizens of Oconee County are about forming an Agricultural and Mechanical Society. In noticing the proposed meeting for that purpose, the Wallalla Courier makes the following appropriate remarks, and we commend its utterances to the farmers generally in this county, especially those not yet enrolled in the Anderson Farmer's Association:

This is a matter of such grave importance and general interest as to need no word of approval or commendation from us. Every one is aware that numerous and radical changes have been, and are being made in the industrial pursuits of the South. Statistics of products now realized per acre as compared with those of the past, demonstrate that these changes are improvements on the old systems, and whether we are to be benefited by these improvements will depend principally on ourselves. If we stand aloof while our sister counties are gathering knowledge from mutual experience and interchange of ideas, we will be distanced in this our chief occupation. The surest and speediest road to successful and progressive improvement in any pursuit arises from free discussion and mutual assistance. The county society is a radiating center from which practical information in farm economy and production is diffused throughout the county. Farmers have never properly appreciated the dignity and importance of their calling. They have always underrated the educational qualifications necessary to good farming. As a class, they have been modest and retiring, and though constituting the chief element of national wealth, they have seldom sought or obtained practical representation in the state or national councils. They are interested about everything in the success of the present efforts to exalt Agriculture from menial occupation in its true position as an acknowledged Science. We are not farmers or mechanics, but in our early days we were trained to the use of the plough and hoe, and when with the new lights in agriculture we compare the old system with the present, we are amazed at the blind prejudice and ignorance which have so long crippled this branch of industry. In mechanics too there has been too much "Conservatism," but as a class this branch of industry has shown more progress than Agriculture. Mechanics generally serve an apprenticeship for their trades. In this way, by proper instruction, they become passable cobblers in three years, but the idea of inventing, perfecting and erecting machinery for the development of the manufacturing interests of the State has been a fruitless dream. While nature has abundantly favored our section in water powers, timber and minerals, we have been content to stand on the threshold of mechanical Science, while others enjoy the rich fruits of its production. Our inferiority in mechanical ingenuity and the want of a perfect system of Agriculture contributed more to the overthrow of the Confederacy than the superior numerical strength at the North. To be ready for every emergency demands in fact the highest excellence in the Physical Sciences. This excellence can only be attained by mutual instruction. Man is an imitative animal and the knowledge of one generation is the starting point of the next. Such has been the course of human nature from the day our first parents covered their nakedness with fig leaves to the present period of comfort and elegance in dress. Every improvement has been slowly and cautiously received. There has been little life or effort towards advancement until lately. Now a whole people are bending their intellectual energies in the laudable effort to recuperate the country by a sound practical course of Agricultural and mechanical industry. Just as there is wisdom in multitude of counsellors, so there is success in a multitude of well directed efforts. To collect the useful knowledge thus derived and disseminate it among the people is the object of the present proposed organization. It cannot fail of good results and merits the earnest support of every well wisher of the country.

A Chapter Upon the Late Interview Between Grant and Lee.
The heartiness with which General Lee has been received everywhere that he has visited, is an interesting feature of American national character. It is valuable above all in establishing the fact that the unrelenting hatred peculiar to radicalism has not taken a very strong hold upon the people of this country after all.

Were a man, holding the same relation to any country in Europe that Lee holds to this country, to visit the capital of his native land, he would be seized and executed, perhaps, on account of his old treason, or he would be imprisoned and persecuted for further sedition. This course, too, is one which radicalism would have introduced into America, had it exercised a complete sway of the popular government. Its spirit is as essentially vindictive as that of an absolute dynasty ever was, and its estimate of character is based upon the same idea of "loyalty" as that of kings and courts. The people of America, however, have demonstrated in many instances, where they have shown their own feelings, that they place another construction upon the meaning of free government.

Grant's conduct toward Lee in requesting an interview has proved that, however much of a tool our president has been to his own ambition, he is not a radical at heart. He may not have, and probably has not, the requisite moral courage to oppose the party which elected him to his position, in many of its extreme measures, and may be devoid of the judgment to discriminate in all cases between radicalism and true republicanism, but he is evidently a peculiarly American citizen and soldier at heart, unaffected there by the greed of radical vengeance, however much his brain may be added.

The treatment of General Lee, both in public and in private, has been an encouraging instance of true American patriotism. When the fanatics of another country would have applauded the heroism they would have found in John Wilkes Booth, the Americans were unanimous in their condemnation of it. When the fanatics of royalty or anarchy would have regarded as the vilest of traitors, the Americans can find sympathy for a man who followed the cause of his people, and commanded the admiration of the world by his steadfastness, his genius, his fortitude, and his justice.

If the Radical press, and the Radical politicians of this country had exerted all the influence which they think to find embodied in their political success, even the modesty, the self-respect, and the province of usefulness which Lee has adopted since the failure of his cause could not have secured for him the generous forgiveness that has everywhere been manifested. He would have been written down a traitor in the blackest letters of history, and every disgrace and shame would have been heaped upon him while living. As it is, the principle which actuated this man in his opposition to the established government is one which is understood and properly appreciated by the American people, who do not hesitate, on account of it, to recognize the admirable character and ability of the rebel leader. Lee will be considered in history as one of the developers of the American nation, and he will occupy, as he does now, quite a different position from that of Jeff. Davis, or Breckenridge or almost any other individual who was identified with the war against the union.—Chicago Times

Twenty-five Dollars Reward!

STOLEN from the subscriber on the night of the 3rd day of February, 1869, a Sorrel Stallion COLT, three years old in April, of slender proportions, round bodied, with two white hind feet, and narrow blaze in his forehead. Both sides of the Horse are marked with traces, two marks on each side. The above Reward will be paid for the recovery of the Horse, and any information regarding him will be thankfully received.
On the same night the horse was taken, a negro man left the neighborhood, and it is supposed that he committed the theft. Said negro is about five feet six or six inches high, weighs about 160 pounds, said to be twenty-five years old, and is of a dark color. When last seen, he had on an old broadcloth suit, and a common scarf. He calls himself Sam Johnson, and said he was raised in Laurens District, but I am informed that his right name is Perry Gore, though sometimes he is called Eph. Gore.
