The Chief Mark of Beauty.

The ruby lip and sparkling eye, May speak a world of love; A beauty that with angels vie The hearts of men to move; A matchless grace, a form divine; A voice lute-toned and low; A brow where not a single line mars the smooth front of snow; Ah! these are charms! But what if they Want yet the charm all prize? In vain the poet's sweetest lay To handsome lips and eyes, For if those lips in soft repeats Part, and alas! disclose— Defective teeth—the beauty flies, The face no longer glows. In smiles is woman fairest ever; And we may often find That but a smile's the magic lever By which she moves mankind. The coral lip and dimpled cheek Make not the smile to win; The magic charm we vain would seek, Gleams from those pearls within. Then, to all who value beauty's power— 'Tis not in lips, or eyes, or curls— Remember that its richest dowry Lies in those PRICKLES FERVA. Then, if those treasures you would save, Take warning now, right early; You can restore the gift you crave By calling on Dr. J. W. GURLEY.
