DEATH OF MR. PETER A. KEYS.

The citizens of Anderson were greatly shocked on Christmas morning by the sad news that Mr. Peter A. Keys had met his death on the preceding evening in a collision upon the Air Line Railroad, where he had been engaged as an engineer for the past seven or eight years. When the recent fast mail train was put Anderson, making the total tax for this on this Road, Mr. Keys, being one of the County this year nine and one-half mills, best and most experienced engineers, was placed in charge of one of these year. The State tax is one quarter of one trains, but on last Friday, the 24th of mill higher, while the County taxes are December, he procured an exchange to one-half of one mill lower.

the regular passenger, in order that he might spend Christmas day with his family in Atlanta. Upon this train he would without accident have reached his home by one or two o'clock in the afternoon, but such was not the doom in store for him by fate. The Air Line was starting a freight train out from Atlanta in two sections, and in order to prevent accident the master of transportation telegraphed the operator at Norcross, whose name was Burgess, the station at which the passenger and freights should pass each other. Four dispatches were sent him on the subject, and each time he was required to telegraph them back to prove that he correctly understood them. The two first expired before the passenger arrived, and the two last remained of force. At 12.30 the passenger train arrived, and the operator gave to conductor Sims and engineer Keys one telegram instead of two, which entirely misled them, and they proceeded, supposing that they had the entire Road to Atlanta open to them. The result is given as follows by the Atlanta Constitution :

From passengers aboard it was learned that conductor Sims left Norcross in obedience to orders above given. When the train was approaching Peachtree creek the freight train rounded a curve, and in an instant the two engines had collided and the work of death was done.

The engineer in charge of the freight train says he did not see the passenger train until he had turned the curve, when he blew down brakes and reversed, but the passenger came rushing on, and in an instant the collision was over. The freight train was running about eight miles per hour, consequently the engineer and fireman had abundant time to jump off and thus escape. The passenger train was running about forty miles an hour, and when the engine struck the shock was terrible. The mail coach, which was just in the rear of the tender, was "telescoped" by it. The baggage car was next to the mail coach, but the Miller platform saved all but the platform itself. Besides the injuries to these cars and the engine, but little hurt was done the passenger train. When the cause of the quick stop was known, Captain Sims rushed to the engine, where he found Keys dead under the side of the engine, and Collins (the

NAPOLEON, OHIO, December 26 .-The following are the particulars of the murder of young Drury by R. K. Scott, the ex-Carpetbag Governor of South Carolina : Drury was clerk in Knowland's drug store, and celebrated Christmas Eve with several young companions, among them being Scott's son, who drank too much, and not wishing his parents to see him intoxicated accepted an offer of eral Assembly. Drury to share the latter's bed at the drug store. About 11 o'clock a gentleman, sent by Mrs. Scott to find her son, discovered his whereabouts, but failing to induce him to go home returned to the hotel and reported the facts to Gen. Scott. The General then went to the election. store, called Drury up and asked for his on. Drury denied that young Scott was there. The father insisted on going to the bed-room. Drury preceded him and on reaching the door of the room turaed round and refused to admit Scott. The General drew a revolver and fired, as he claims accidentally, the ball passing through Drury's brain, causing instant death. Scott got his son and returned to the hotel, reported the shooting and was arrested and taken to Defiance for safe keeping, there being much excitement and talk of lynching here. His preliminary trial occurs on Monday. Drury was to have been married on Tuesday.

At once every available hand went to work with a will to extricate the dead and dying, and after quite an amount of labor their work was rewarded, but the sight that met their eyes was indeed harhis left leg being torn to shreds and his face and body literally cooked and scalded. A stick of wood entered his abdomen and was driven into his body, tearing it almost asunder. The bones of his leg were broken in pieces, the ends of which protruded through the mutilated flesh. His foot was almost detached from his leg, and the sight made the contemplation.

Over his left eye was a terrible bruise and the side of his face was badly mashed. There he lay, his full, handsome beard matted with the blood bruised from his body, which, but a moment before, was full of life and health.

During the greater portion of the afternoon Mrs. Keye awaited the arrival of the train which she looked for her husband to come on, and could get no answer as to the cause of the delay, except that the train was behind time, and it was not until after night that she heard the terrible news. Mr. Keys' remains were carried to Atlanta, where they were prepared for interment, and on the following day - Christmas - they were brought to Anderson.

Mr. Peter Keys was at the time of his death in the strength of a mature manhood, which had scarce touched its zenith, being forty years of age. He was raised in our midst, and spent by far the greater portion of his life here, where he was very popular and highly esteemed for his upright life and his manly and genial qualities. The news of his death brought with it a sad Christmas to the houses of many families of relatives and friends in and around Anderson. On terred in the Baptist cemetery, with the Masonic burial rites, after solemn funeral services, conducted by Revs. J. S. Murray and Wm. H. Strickland, A large concourse of people gathered to pay this tribute to their departed friend. There has never been but one expression as to the occasion of the accident. It was wholly due to the criminal carelessness of the operator at Norcross. Mr. Keys, therefore, met his death while faithful and efficient manner, which leaves his memory honored and respected, even by those who did not know him.

The stoutest turn with shuddering from its Governor dressed himself, and, having found Stout, inquired if he had found his son. Stout said that he had, and had brought him to the hotel, but a clerk at a drug store named Drury had got him away from him. The Governor started to go to the door opening from the rear of the storeroom into another room, when young Drury placed himself

- Mr. Vennor, the Canadian weather prophet, having come very near the exact condition of the weather for December in his predictions, his forecast of what may be expected in January becomes of interest. Mr. Vennor says : "I anticipate that New Year's callers will have heavy sleighing this year from Montreal to Washington, and that a cold snap during the first part of this mouth will preserve it for that deriod. I expect blockades of snow in the United States about the 7th and 8th of January, and rainy days during the month will be exceedingly few. The second quarter will open with heavy falls and terminate in a cold snap. The middle of the month will bring snowfalls, which will terminate in milder weather toward the end of the third quarter. The thaw, which will be interrupted by a brief cold spell, will extend from about the 18th of the month into February. The record of this month will show it to have been a severe one, and the general conditions of the weather will remind us of some of what are called real old-fash-
