

General Sherman in Atlanta.

ATLANTA, November 15.—The Exposition has been through to day by visitors from all parts of the Union. More than three million people have been admitted through the gates. Among the distinguished visitors were Congressman Oates, of Alabama, and D. Wyatt Aiken, of South Carolina; Horace Maynard, of Tennessee; Gen. Sherman, of Georgia; C. D. Morrow, of the Army Cavalry, and Gen. Fox, of the Engineer Corps.

The main feature of the day was the annual reunion of the Mexican Veterans of Adjutant-General Sherman's Expedition. The reunion was held in the afternoon at the Grand Hotel. About seven hundred veterans were present. Gen. W. S. Walker presided. Gen. Henry R. Jackson, of Savannah, president of the Association, delivered an eloquent address, reviewing the victories and hardships of the Mexican campaign, and then the veterans were divided into military strategy and hand fighting unsurpassed in the history of the world. He paid glowing tribute to his comrades who fell on the battlefield. He claimed that he gave the first rifle to General Sherman, and that he was the only field officer who was in the field of battle in the highest position, and that the hearts of the people will turn to the military leader as the loadstone seeks the pole. He concluded with a stirring appeal for the harmonious sentiment and feeling. He encouraged his comrades to join in the patriotic hope and prayerful aspiration that before their eyes closed in death the Union of the Fathers would be restored to the glory of their fathers. He said that he had not intended to speak. He was present only to attend the Exposition and see how the people were prospering, but that the brotherhood of soldiery was something so pure, so ennobling, that no one has felt it, whether in the Florida, Mexican or any other war, whose heart does not respond to the call of his comrades. He was not of Scott's or Taylor's line in Mexico, but was a lieutenant in Fort Moultrie at Charleston, and was sent around by Cape Fear to take part in the expedition. He gathered in the fruits of victory in the war with Mexico. He thanked God he was an American citizen. He could go anywhere and stop in any place without harm, so he behaved himself. Every man has an equal right to do what he wants. This is guaranteed by the Government. First, we had a war of rebellion, to gain our independence, next a war to extend and establish our boundaries, and then, as in every country, we were quarreled among ourselves. But this is now the same country, the same people, nation, soil, government and flag. I am just as friendly to Georgia as I am to Ohio. This is a government worth fighting for and worth dying for. I am prepared to do either; but I would rather look at these buildings than witness the storm and destruction of war which once swept these battlefields. Every honorable man and every kindly woman in the country will take an interest in your welfare as you do yourselves.

Sherman was heard with respectful attention, and made an entirely unobjectionable speech. He will spend another day here, and then go to Chattanooga to visit Judge Key. He will then extend his trip over the Cincinnati Southern road.—Special Dispatch to News and Courier.

The Proper Size of Farms.

Says the Baltimore Sun: "Pennsylvania farmers have deserved a high reputation, and it is of interest to learn the conclusion to which they have arrived with regard to the proper size of farms. In the South a tract of less than a couple of hundred acres is thought to be scarcely deserving of the name of a farm, and in danger of being contemptuously referred to as a 'place.' But in the extensive farms in Pennsylvania, where the intensive rather than the extensive plan of farming prevails. For facts illustrative of this it is sufficient to turn to the advertising columns of such a paper as this, the York Press, upon one page of which are listed farms, with barns, dwelling-houses, out-houses, &c., complete, are described as for sale, exclusive of lots not 'improved' with dwellings. Of the thirteen farms the largest is one of 260 acres, and is equipped with every convenience of a building, &c., such as a Virginian would expect only in an estate of a thousand acres. The next largest has 200 acres, but, as if the proprietor thought himself uncontented with so much land profitably, there are, besides the owner's residence, two tenant houses. These are the great farms. The rest range from 100 acres down through a declining series of farms of 90, 71, 85, 25, 18, 15, 10, 8, 7, and 6 acres in extent, and the detached lots to be rented for farming purposes are even smaller. That good results may be obtained from farms of these small sizes has been proved to admit of no question. The wonder is that farmers of other sections of the country who complain of want of capital do not dispose of part of their land, and with the means thus obtained imitate the example which the York farmer long ago set them.

Comely Becomes Tragedy.

NORFOLK, Va., November 14.—A dispute arose, a day or two ago, between John Jasper and James Casey, two well-known colored men of Norfolk county, in regard to a plot of land. After considerable discussion the disputants, in a joking way, decided to settle their difference on the field of honor. A mock duel was arranged, seconds chosen, and double-barreled shotguns selected as the weapons.
