The lecturer propounded the ers, and a full line of agricultural machin the questions, "Does education pay?" and "How does it pay?" with which enquiries as a text he proceeded to treat the subject, which is generally considered a hackneyed one, in a plain and simple manner, which anything in his line that any of our readers was within the easy grasp of the mind of an ordinary child, and yet it was beautiful, tions were clear, and always came to assist the illucidation of every important thought. was interesting and instructive from beginning to end, showing in a great many ways how popular education elevates the character and the prosperity of a people. He also gave interesting comparisons between the a call. eral education and the success which has attended these efforts. Dr. Mayo spoke at some length upon the importance of having good teachers, taking the position that the school should be run for a stated time by a well-trained teacher, and that a suffi-cent salary should be paid to secure the ser-vices of such a teacher as would render the work of education efficient.
