

Bill App Complains.

The more a man does the more he can do, especially if there is a gentle pressure behind him which says, 'Don't stop, keep moving, here is another little job for you to do.' A farming man can only do his work for to-morrow ever so carefully, but it is mighty hard to work up to it, for the first thing he knows the plow points are too dull or single tree breaks in the new ground, or a neighbor's hogs, that have got no pasture but the big road, have broke through the water gate, and it takes an hour to run 'em out again, for a hog wont go out at the same hole he came in. These hogs that pester me so come the quarters of a million every day to peruse my premises, and they have lived on me all winter, and I've dog'd 'em pretty bad, but they come back again next day and live round a-watching, and water gates and gates are no protection, for they are coated hogs. Cob told me to catch one, mash his tail on a rock, but it did no good. I can fix a gate that that old cow can't root open, but I'm not going to do it, for she has no right to put her head under and shake it, and lift it and lift it until she gets it open; and I'm not going to stake down my water gate on the lower side either, for the creek rises rapidly, and some times in the night, and brings the water up, and the gate must be free to rise with it. The fact is, nobody has any right to keep such hogs unless they keep 'em at home, and I've borne with it until patience is exhausted and I'll have to stand by my fence, and last Sunday we all shut up the house and went up to spend the day with our married offspring, and when we come back in the shaft of the afternoon the old sow and all her shoats were under the house and had broke up her hen's nest, and when I made way for her in my wrath she actually showed fight and flumblomzed at me like the premises were her's.

THE FENCE LAW AND THE HOGS.

The fence law as it gives these boys a pasture in a lane nearly a mile long and open at both ends, and they have no fence on either side, and they will be scarce next fall. There is a power of work to do now and it looks like my share of it, it bigger than usual for one of the boys has gone to railroad and another is out of Wall he is not doing in bed sick but he is not able-bodied enough to do hard work and keep it at, but just feeble enough to go a fishing and set on the bank and get the biggest bites and catch the smallest fish in the creek. Mrs. Arch is a mighty particular about her chickens when their eyes look hollow and their complain of pains, and she is a mighty good doctor, but she knows I have no time to get sick, and so it's William this and William that, and the other day she called me a quarter of a mile off, and when I came a pullin' and blowin' she said the winder curtain had fell down and wanted me to fix it. Some more new dirt was wanted for the flower pots and boxes, and I had to bring home samples from seven fence corners before I got the right kind, and the big old fish geranium that don't smell good nor look pretty had to be divided and set out in the ground, and the succulent vine had to have an arbor built and two more crops for the little chickens that were hanging out had to be fixed up, and the new born ducks had to have their tails cut off and the peas were to stick and the little chaps were to say, 'papa this and papa that, and yesterday I had to take a basket and a digging hoe and go way down in the meadow, and on the creek, and dig up lilies, and violets, and all sorts of wild flowers for them to plant in their little bird gardens, and I had to have hen's eggs and pigeon eggs blowed out to paint and dye and fix up for Easter, and I had to make 'em a draft-board, and say spoons to two for draft men, and dyes and I had to write up some new things every day to do, and it is a good thing for a family to have a willing horse to work in any sort of harness, and though I say myself I'm that sort of a horse, and I think it suits me, for it is a very good thing to have a horse that never gets done and every week's washing is to look over and sort out and the missing buttons to sew on and the rebis to close up and the churning is to do, and some times the dander goes flying for two hours before the butter will come, and now she is teaching the little chaps to write little letters, and when they get into mischief and have to come to headquarters, they come a little the highest, getting a whipping of any children, and the world, only they don't quite get it, and I haven't kept any account, but my opinion is that not less than 1,700 whippings have been propped 'em, and are now due and unpaid. I expect a whole lot more other day, 'now, Carl, I will whip you for that,' and I echoed in gentleness, 'about what time,' but Carl got it on a credit as usual.

MRS. ARCH'S WORK.

But my work don't compare with her's by no means for there's an over-laying of sewing and patching and ironing going on all the time and she never gets done and every week's washing is to look over and sort out and the missing buttons to sew on and the rebis to close up and the churning is to do, and some times the dander goes flying for two hours before the butter will come, and now she is teaching the little chaps to write little letters, and when they get into mischief and have to come to headquarters, they come a little the highest, getting a whipping of any children, and the world, only they don't quite get it, and I haven't kept any account, but my opinion is that not less than 1,700 whippings have been propped 'em, and are now due and unpaid. I expect a whole lot more other day, 'now, Carl, I will whip you for that,' and I echoed in gentleness, 'about what time,' but Carl got it on a credit as usual.

Not a Dabbler.

Not a Dabbler had eleven sick killed last Sunday by the dogs. I bring mine up to the fold every night, but I'll m' on the expectation all the time, and still I wonder if there is no remedy any there for these sort of disasters—never mind the little troubles that come up and make him grow old before his time. Life is full of 'em and I reckon they are sent upon us to make us get tired of life and the better to fit and prepare us for heaven. I hope so.

Grant as a Lover.

Grant as a Lover. Hearing that there was a lady living in this city who had once been courted by General Grant, and who had refused her hand in early womanhood to this noted American civil and military character, a Constitution reporter sought an interview with the lady, with very satisfactory results. The newspaper representative found the lady in the city of Grant's to be a lady considerably advanced in years, yet still large, active and buoyant, and not nearly so reticent as the General. She had not seen General Grant since his death she had not seen him in person, father carried on a tannery in Portsmouth, Ohio. She once had occasion to reside for a time in the family of a farmer whose farm joined that of Grant's and it was during her stay at this house that she was courted by General Grant. It must have been in the spring time, for she says she and Grant would meet at the division fence, on each side of which was beautiful flowers. 'Ulick,' said she, 'would say to me, "Let's gather flowers and see who will have the most kinds when we get through."'

Senator Hill's Sufferings.

The announcement in to day's papers that Senator Hill is assured a permanent cure suggests the suffering that he has undergone. The extent of his suffering which he has been subjected to is not realized by the public. Four times has he been under the knife. One time his tongue has been taken out—the entire left lobe of his mouth—the glands in the left side of his neck. He said that if he were to choose death or the suffering he had endured from the cutting, he would not hesitatingly take death—were it not his duty to live and endure. The last operation was the most severe and probably successful. When he was put under for it, it was intended to only take out a small lump that had hardened on the gland in his neck. After he was insensible it was determined to adopt the heroic treatment and take out the entire gland. He was kept under the knife two hours, the gland cut out and the knife sent in clear to the new flesh that had filled the place of the first operation. When Mr. Hill awoke he was terribly exhausted and shocked at the hole cut in his neck. The gashes had been neatly sewed up. For seven days he could not move his lips and lived on liquid food. After this he improved until inflammation developed about the wound. Then came the most critical period of his sickness. The entire opening of the wound being closed, the pus accumulated and pressed against his throat. He was seized with fever and could hardly speak. At last he lay on his back and his head on a pillow and his mouth burst into his mouth. This gave him relief and he went to Philadelphia. He was put under the knife again and the outer edge of the wound slit open so that it might heal from the bottom. This is doing finely and without inflammation. No trace of the disease can be found and the hopes of his permanent cure were never so strong. He says he will not submit to the knife again, and another operation there will be no need.

A Disputed Will.

Captain W. has just returned from the Warm Springs. The Captain is a widower. At the springs was a widow who rather set her cap for the Captain. The girls told him to look out, and the Captain replied, 'Well, he was ready.' Sitting out on the porch one evening, the cool breeze fanning like a ten-cent palm-leaf, and thinking of his daughters far away at school, the widow moved up and opened the conversation. 'I hear, Captain, you have grown-up daughters?' 'Yes, Madam, I have.' 'How I should like to see their pictures!' 'I will show you a picture of my eldest daughter,' said the Captain, handing her one. 'Oh, such a sweet face,' said the widow; 'and such a fine eye. Isn't she like you, Captain?' 'I don't know, Madam, that she is.' 'It is a wonder to me, Capt. W.—you do not get married.' 'Well, Madam, I never think of it; for the woman I'd have might not have me, and I'd have to get along without her.' 'Yes; but what kind of a lady would suit you?' said the widow, looking her sweetest. It was right here the Captain's nerve did not break him, but, setting his eye steadily at the widow, he launched his heart and replied: 'Madam, she must be ninety-nine years old to a second and worth $100,000.' 'It's getting so chilly out here I must go for my shawl,' said the widow; and she took her shawl and went to her room. The turn of fortune's wheel has brushed by him with a toss of her head.

A Fisher Caught.

'On my last trip to the States,' said Mr. Arthur Fisher of this paper, 'I caught a very bad cold which settled into a severe case of rheumatism. I did not know what to do for it, so I resolved to purchase St. Jacobs Oil for trial. Happy thought! I began applying the Oil, and in two weeks was as well as ever.'—Toronto (Canadian) Globe.

The vicissitudes of American life are wonderful. The millionaire of today becomes a bankrupt to-morrow. The ramp of to-day becomes a capital in the day following. This is strikingly illustrated in the case of Governor Littlefield, of Rhode Island. When Sprague was Governor of that State Littlefield was a common workman in a cotton mill. The turn of fortune's wheel has made Littlefield a Governor while Sprague is a bankrupt.

Old Aunt Simral.

Old Aunt Simral, who she had been familiarly known in Shelbyville for many years, died on Thursday of last week, aged about ninety years. The foundation for a first-class romance in real life is connected with this old woman and her descendants. She came to Shelbyville some sixty or seventy years ago, as the slave of a man named Neel, who went into the hotel business at that time she was a bright quadroon, and was the mother of a daughter as fair and lovely as any who boasted of Caucasian blood. The daughter attracted the attention of a wealthy Southerner who was sojourning for a few days at the hotel kept by Neel, and though but a child in years, he conceived the idea of becoming her owner, with what motives was developed in after years. The transfer was made, and the handsome little octocon was sent South, where she grew up in a fine education, white schools without even a breath of suspicion as to her origin ever being excited. The wealthy Southerner then married her, and we next find her in St. Louis, moving in the best society, with two lovely daughters as the result of her marriage. These daughters both married rising young lawyers in that city, one of whom afterwards became a member of Congress. The Southerner died many years ago, and his widow married a German in Philadelphia, where they lived in style until a few years ago, when husband and wife both passed off the stage of action. Aunt Simral, the daughter, then came to Shelbyville, where she lived in the only relation that existed between them. By the terms of her master's will Aunt Sally became free at his death, and according to the terms of the will, she was to be sold by which was in slaves. She possessed at one time a great deal of fine jewelry and silver-ware. Her money gradually slipped away from her, on account of ill-advised investments, until at the time of her death she had not more than $100 in her pocket. She possessed remarkable vitality until a short time before death, and could often be seen about the streets. In late years she became very deaf and consequently she could not settle. Several years ago she settled everything she possessed to her daughter, and no argument could convince her that her daughter was dead. Aunt Sally had been cared for for some time by a daughter of a former slave.—Sichy (Ky.) Spectator.
