Shortly afterwards Mr. Warner was called away on business to Greenville. Summers, hearing of Mr. Warner's absence, sent a negro, named Moses Lynch, to his home to see if he could not by some means get hold of the papers which Warner held in connection with the case. The negro approached the house and, calling Mrs. Warner to the door, told her his errand, and demanded that she give up the papers immediately, and threatening, if she did not do so to cut her throat. changed from Abbeville to Lowndesville, Mrs. Warner replied that rather than be killed she would give up the papers and went back into the house as if to get them, but instead of getting them, she picked up a double-barreled shot-gun. Lynch, eeing the gun, started to run, and as he did so Mrs. Warner fired at him through a window. The shot brought the negro to the ground, but he soon arose, and as he did so she fired the second time. Lynch ran off, and as he did so he dropped a small memorandum book in which was a postal card addressed to him from Summers. The following is a copy of the
