Women Who Eat Arsenic.

The sensational trial, conviction, sentence and commutation of sentence of Mrs. Maybrick, charged with poisoning her husband, and her defense, through which she claimed that the presence of arsenical fly paper in her bodice was for toilet purposes, have turned public attention to the use of this poison by women of fashion. Mrs. Maybrick endeavored to explain away the presence of the poison by alleging its use for the improvement of her complexion. She explained how she skillfully prepared it for toilet purposes, and, in view of the strictness of English law regarding the sale of poison when not absolutely necessary, her explanation would probably have been accepted by the court and her diversion from the path of wifely duty been notorious.

It is appalling to note how the demand for arsenic has increased of late years. Before the entering American women of the middle class discovered the complexion-improving qualities of the deadly drug, its use was confined to wealthy women of fashion. Soon all women began to learn of the desirable pale pink tint imparted to the skin when arsenic was judiciously taken, and druggists began to find in arsenic a profitable source of revenue.

Druggists do not deny (nor do reputable physicians) that arsenic carefully administered may improve the complexion or even benefit the system under certain conditions. But they deplore the prodigal use which the poisonous drug has reached. English law is so strict regarding the sale of such drugs that conscientious apothecaries refuse to supply customers except upon the prescription of a physician. In America the laws are more lax, and the most trivial excuse given by the lady customer will pave the way for the purchase of arsenic which an unscrupulous customer may apply to an unlawful purpose.

A well-known druggist makes the statement that fly paper is largely used in England by women for the same purpose to which Mrs. Maybrick devoted it. Soaking the paper in water will extract the arsenic from the sheet and transfer the poison to the liquid. It is then applied to the skin or drunk in minute doses with the result which is so apparent in Mrs. Maybrick's appearance. Like the opium habit, arsenic eating grows upon the victim, and its work is slow but sure. Arsenic is used for anointing purposes, too, by large numbers of working girls who toil in the mills and factories. They have not yet learned the art of eating the drug, and employ it in a crude fashion by dissolving the substance in water and applying it in lotion-like form to the face and hands. Its beautiful effects are not so quickly apparent as are those of arsenic eating, but sooner or later the foolish victims of the poisonous drug contract an appetite for it, and their death is but a matter of months.

It is not possible to estimate the number of deaths among women for which the use of arsenic is responsible, owing to their secrecy in using the drug. But a goodly proportion of so-called blood poisoning cases can be traced to an ignorant use of arsenic. There is no denying the fact that its use is daily increasing. American women, favored by the looseness of laws governing druggists, are enabled to buy arsenic in its pure state, and do not take kindly to fly paper. Doubtless they sympathize with Mrs. Maybrick, whose confession has laid before the world the dire emergency to which women arsenic slaves in England have been reduced. With characteristic American independence, they buy arsenic powder or in lumps, and seek the seduction of their homes to make use of it.—Philadelphia Record.

A Trillion Kisses.

The case of the Florida man who had his love letters produced and read in Court should teach other lovers moderation in the making of osculatory contracts.

In a single postscript the Florida man undertook to deliver to the lady of his choice no less than 1,000,000,000,000 kisses. And as such contracts are not frequently made in love letters it may be well to give a thought to the magnitude of the undertaking.

Whoever will take the trouble to figure it out will find that even if this amorous Southerner should give the lady 15,000 kisses a minute, and we affirm that no person could hope to do more than that, and even if he could keep up this rate of osculation twenty-four hours a day, never pausing to eat, sleep or take breath, working 365 days every year, it would take him more than one hundred years to complete the contract. And by that time, it is painful to reflect, the ardor of his love may have cooled. Even at the end of one hundred years, counting 15,000 kisses a minute, there would remain an undelivered balance of more than 200,000,000,000, a number which in itself might well appall the most industrious.

We therefore feel constrained to advise writers of love letters not to undertake contracts of the magnitude of that reported from Florida.

A Modern Samson.

There are many Delilahs, but only one Samson, and he is performing at the Royal Aquarium at present, where his feats of strength are certainly of an original and marvellous character. The spectator as he watches feels that it is better to be friendly with such a man with a blow of his fist he breaks an iron chain that will bear pressure of 3,000 pounds. With his two hands grasping a short chain of 2,500 pounds ascending pressure, he makes a momentary effort and pulls the iron chain to bits, and in what seems the most wonderful feat—namely, fastening two tight iron chain bracelets or armlets around his biceps—the spectator may view the process from beginning to end. One hears the strong man take a long breath, sees the muscles of his arm grow bigger and bigger, the cords of his neck swelling with the sustained effort, his face crimsoning, and then, in the silence, those nearest the stage hear a curious little snoring snuff; it is the double chain armlet that has broken and that the next second falls ringing to the floor. When Samson's fist is clenched and he is ready to strike, the measurement of his upper arm round biceps and triceps is 6 1/2 inches, which we may casually remark, is considered a tolerable waist for a young lady.

Among some of his minor feats, if such displays can be called minor, Samson took a penny piece from one of the audience and at one trial beat it with his fingers as one may beat a road ticket, and held it up to view for a second and then deliberately broke it in pieces, and returned it to the owner. A very little practice will convince amateurs of the hopefulness of breaking pianos with finger and thumb. The strong man next took a four foot iron gas pipe and bent it round his neck and cheerfully straightened it again by repeated blows on his left arm, such arm being for the nonce a species of anvil. Fourteen men came upon the stage, by invitation, to pull against him, but Samson not deeming them enough, or sizing up their athletic capabilities with a professional eye, expressed a wish for four more. These men he divided into nine a side, the two sides nearly the width of a man's stretch apart, and each side being provided with and grasping a strong and lengthy iron rod. Before placing himself between them, Samson stimulated their ardor by promising £100 to them if he failed to move them, and apparently there was a grateful determination in the men's faces to win the prize. Then there was a short, sharp struggle; the men held their ground for a brief space, were pulled together and the next moment thrust apart, and finally, away as they went, were carried away by the intensity of one straining man in their midst.

Samson is a man of thirty-one, of French origin, a native of Alsace Lorraine. He comes to us from America, and this is his first appearance in England. At fifteen years of age he entered the circus rans as an athlete and pulled against horses and elephants; at eighteen he commenced to wrestle and from that time to the present he has left no stone unturned whereby he can maintain, train and develop his extraordinary strength.—Pall Mall Gazette.

What Women Can Do.

She can come to a conclusion without the slightest trouble of reasoning on it, and no sane man can do that.

Six of them can talk at once and get along first rate, and no men can do that. She can safely stick fifty pins in her dress while he is getting one under his thumb nail.

She is cool as a cucumber in half a dozen tight dresses and skirts, while a man will sweat and fume and growl in one loose shirt.

She can talk as sweet as peaches and cream to the woman she hates, while two men would be punching each other's head before they had exchanged ten words.

She can throw a stone with a curve that would be a fortune to a base ball pitcher.

She can say no in such a low voice that it means yes.

She can sharpen a lead pencil if you give her plenty of time and plenty of pencils.

She can dance all night in a pair of shoes two sizes too small for her, and enjoy every minute of the time.

She can appreciate a kiss from her husband seventy five years after the marriage ceremony is performed.

She can go to church and afterward tell you what every woman in the congregation had on, and in some rare instances can give you some faint idea of what the text was.

She can walk half the night with a colicky baby in her arms without once expressing the desire of murdering the infant.

She can do more in a minute than a man can do in an hour, and do it better.

She can drive a man crazy for twenty-four hours, and then bring him to paradise in two seconds by simply tickling him under the chin, and there does not live that mortal son of Adam's misery who can do it.—From the Boston Times.

The Northern States grow in their cities; the Southern in their rural districts. One third of Minnesota's people live in cities; forty-nine out of fifty persons in Mississippi dwell in the country. While the cities of the North are growing at a rapid rate the country is a standstill; in the South the gain is equally distributed among all the communities.—Louisville Courier Journal.

How She Conquered.

George Paul, a young civil engineer, while surveying a railway in the Pennsylvania hills, met a plain, lovable little country girl, and married her. After a few weeks he brought her home to his family in New York and left her there, while he returned to camp.

Marian had laid many plans to visit the affections of her new kinsfolk. She had practiced diligently at her music; she was sure they would be pleased to hear her stories of her beautiful sister and brother; she imagined their admiration of her new blue silk gown and winter bonnet.

But the Pauls, one and all, were indifferent to her music, her family and her gowns. They gave "George's wife" a friendly welcome, and then each went on his or her way and paid no attention to her.

After the first shock of disappointment, Marian summoned her courage. "If I have nothing to give them, they must have to give me," she thought, cheerfully.

She listened eagerly when Isabel sang, and her smiles and tears showed how keenly she appreciated the music. She examined Louisa's paintings every day with unflagging interest, discussed every effort, and was happy if she could help mix the colors or prepare the canvas.

The questioned grandmas about her neuralgia, advised new remedies or listened unadvised to the accounts of old ones day after day.

When Uncle John, just returned from Japan, began to describe his adventures, Marian was the only auditor who never grew tired or interrupted him. After a two hours' lecture, in which her part had been that of a dumb, bright faced listener, Uncle John declared that George's wife was the most intelligent woman he had ever met.

When George came home the whole family was loud in her praises. She was a fine musician; she had unerring taste in art; she was charming, witty and lovable. George only said that she had won them unconsciously; not by displaying her own merits, but by appreciating theirs.

This is a true story in fact, but the truth of its meaning is repeated wherever a woman is found who has the intangible quality called "charm." She may be deformed or pock-marked, but will win friendship and love by the lack of self-consciousness, by her quick sympathy with others.

Many an attractive girl would save herself much anxiety and vain effort at her entrance into the world of society if she understood that it is made up of individuals each of whom desire to find not the beauty, wit, or talent of others, but the cordial recognition of their own.

If you can honestly forget yourself and take an interest in others, you will soon find yourself surrounded by hosts of friends; but if you dishonestly affect this interest, you will deceive no one. Your dull companion will recognize you a snob and a toady.—Youth's Companion.
