The McKinley Act is being attacked through the Courts on constitutional grounds. A firm of importers in Chicago has begun a suit for the recovery of duties paid, on the ground that the government has no right to levy taxes for any other purposes than the support of the government and the legitimate expenses thereof, and that under our constitution the levying of a tax on the people for the support of private or corporate enterprises, business or manufactures of any kind is not warranted. A number of firms in St. Louis have also united to contest the legality of the McKinley law. The ground on which this last attack is made is that the Bill passed by the Senate was not the same Bill signed by the President, as through a clerical error, an entire section was left out. Other equally important points are made. Cincinnati importers have also brought suits involving the validity of the act, in which the points raised are the same as those raised by both the St. Louis and Chicago disputants.

The Southern Farmer says the cause of the low price of cotton is agreed to on all sides as a consequence of an immense increase of acreage during the past year. Many tenants, as well as landlords, are holding, their cotton for better prices. Now let the edict go forth from the highest Alliance authorities in the Southern States to all the sub-Aliances urging that the acreage in cotton for the present year be reduced at least 15 to 20 per cent., and the acreage in food crops be proportionately increased. A combined action of this sort would be almost certain to raise this great movement, and this State may be called upon to furnish the Presiden leader in 1892, it is probable it would be United States Senator Peffer."

A Strange Story

While a huge pine log was being sawed into timber at a saw mill on a small creek some two miles from Athens, as the workmen were turning it over preparatory to "squaring it," what was their astonishment to see the head of a huge frog bob out, where he was imbedded and barely escaped being cut by the saw. How in the world his toodship got there is a mystery, as he was completely incased without any possible means of ingress and egress. As the log was the ourth or fifth from the butt of the tree, the frog must have had his apartment some fifty or sixty feet from the ground. We know of but one solution to give to this phenomenon, and it is that the animal must have, from life's young

Stopping A Train.

The following story is told by B. W. Vedder, a locomotive engineer now in St. Louis: "When the Kansas Pacific was first opened the Indians were very hostile, and there was constant fear that they would wreck the trains. That they did not is due to their ignorance of the iron horse and of the best methods of destroying it. One of my firemen had an experience with the Cheyennes that he will never forget. He was on the road near Fort Wallace when he saw that the Indians had out the telegraph wire and knew that he might look out for squalls. They were never satisfied with simply cutting the wire, but chopped it into inch pieces with their tomahawks to effectually stop the mysterious messages. As the train came near a large patch of sunflow-ers, which grew on both sides of the track, over one hundred Indians rose up, stretched a strong rope across the track, braced themselves and prepared to
