HAD FORTY-THREE HUSBANDS.

The "Marriage Trick" Played by a Young Englishwoman.

PARIS, March 28.—A woman who has actually gone through the marriage service with forty-three men and swindled all but one of them within three hours after the ceremony is the latest product of the Parisian police. Six years ago Eveline Leal, a handsome young English girl, married a Frenchman, who died within a month of the wedding, leaving her with no money and plenty of debts. To "square" herself with society, Eveline resorted to what is known in police lingo as "the marriage trick." Her method of procedure was simple and ingenious. She advertised, stating that a widow possessing 1,200,000 francs wished to marry a gentleman in good circumstances, belonging to the nobility or to the high commercial class.

Answers were to be sent to the post-office. Her accomplice, who occupied the position of companion, seems to have had the important duty of choosing the victims from among the applicants. At any rate, the suitor was never admitted into Eveline's presence unless his personal appearance was in his favor, and then he was granted a rendezvous either in a sumptuous apartment on the Champs Elysees or at one of the best hotels. Naturally Eveline took a different name for every occasion. For some suitors her husband and fortune she called herself Madame Ferbank, Madame Rappy, Madame Decomy, Madame Bureilly. She always began by making some objection to an immediate marriage.

Sometimes assuming the character of an ingenious miss, she said her mother considered that she was too young for marriage, and that the applicant must wait awhile. On other occasions the fortune or social position of the suitor was not what she desired, but in the end she always allowed herself to be captivated by these personal qualities of the would-be husbands. She often managed things so cleverly that she received rich presents from her suitors, and, after getting as much as she could, suddenly disappeared. In several cases she considered it better policy to secure possession of the wedding gifts by agreeing to a marriage ceremony. For this she invariably crossed the channel, expressing a preference for the wedding to take place in England. After the clergyman had in all good faith pronounced the nuptial benediction, she returned with her victim to the hotel, but always managed to disappear before night, never, however, leaving the wedding gifts behind her.

Eveline victimized thirty-two presumably intelligent men in this way before she fell into the hands of the Paris police in the autumn of 1887. She was sent to jail for two years, obtained an early release for good conduct, resorted to her old tricks and victimized ten lovers more without detection. The swindlers were too much ashamed to inform the police; but her forty-third victim gave the police information which led to Eveline's second arrest on Good Friday at the Hotel Maurice, Rue Rivoli. Her dupes this time was a French Viscount who had ruined himself through gambling, and was anxious to regain his armorial bearings with the 1,200,000 francs of the charming widow. It would even seem as if he were really in love with the adventures, for he journeyed with her and a companion (a certain Mrs. Caba), believed to have fled from New Orleans.

They traveled in England, Belgium and Norway, the Viscount paying all expenses by borrowing money right and left on his expectations. He made Eveline rich presents wherever they went. At last back in Paris, the Viscount insisted upon having a day fixed for the wedding, but to no avail. Miss Reynolds—that was the last name she had assumed—was inexorable. He must wait. This fact awakened the suspicions of the Viscount, who laid the case before M. Goron, Chief of Detectives. When the officers presented themselves at the Hotel Maurice Eveline was greatly astounded, but followed them bravely to the police station. As for her companion Mrs. Caba, she was absent from the hotel when Eveline was arrested, and has not been seen since. This time fair Eveline will probably get a sentence which will put her out of harm's way for many years. She is the child of a well-to-do farmer in Shropshire, the fertility of whose acres made it an easy matter to provide handsomely for his family, composed of one daughter and three sons. Eveline, like many others in the same position, being the pet of the father and brothers, and fairly good looking, soon learned to command, and grew up in the belief that mankind was created to do her homage and minister to her wishes.

The Conductor Ignored Orders.

SPARTANBURG, S. C., April 14.—A terrible wreck occurred just dark last night on the Asheville and Spartanburg Railroad, between a through freight from Asheville, and a material train, near the rock out above Landrum. The freight had orders to wait at Melrose fifty minutes to allow the material train to pass. The conductor disobeyed his orders and attempted to make Troyon, when the two trains came together. Both trains were running at a high rate of speed when they collided at a point just a mile beyond Homeshole. Both engines were demolished. The fireman and a negro on the material train were killed. Both of the engineers and eighteen of the hands were badly injured, many of them fatally, and it is thought one negro had his leg caught in the furnace and burned off before assistance came.

All day yesterday the wounded men were being treated by physicians from Asheville, and half a dozen amputations of legs and arms were made.

When the collision occurred a car from the rear end of the material train broke loose and ran back four miles to the rock out above Landrum. The flagman, knowing the danger of the passenger train running into it, ran back the entire distance and arrived completely exhausted, but just in time to flag down the regular passenger train. By this splendid effort, another horrible disaster was avoided.

Trains were delayed several hours on account of the wreck, but are now running on schedule time.

It is impossible to ascertain the names of the conductors or any of the parties killed or injured.

"Well, Tommy, I'm glad to see you getting along so much better at school," said the young man's uncle. "You have gone a whole week without being whipped, haven't you?" "Yes, sir; teacher's not a lame teacher."

Could Not Kill His Friend.

Sergeant Roswell recently gave a bed in Central Station to William J. Higgins, a young soldier who four months ago was dishonorably discharged from the United States army in Utah, and has ever since been painfully making his way back to his home in Troy, N. Y. Higgins had his discharge, duly signed by the officers of the court martial which thus disgraced him for neglect of duty. He had been a member of Company F, Sixteenth regiment, Department of the Plate, and was stationed at Fort Duane, Utah.

He showed the effect of the past few months' hardship in his appearance, though he must once have been a handsome young soldier. His black, curly hair was full of dust from the last freight car in which he had traveled, and his dark eyes showed nothing of a soldier's spirit. His hands and face were red, swollen and dirty, and his clothes were almost in rags. He told his story in a way that gave the impression that he was truthful.

"I sacrificed honor to friendship," he said simply. "Myself and a friend named Franklin enlisted together from Troy just a year previous to the date of my court martial. We had served our apprenticeship in the New York militia, and were as fond of soldier life as of each other. A year's service only confined us in our liking for the army. I wished above all things to spend my life as a soldier, and so did he. But he was quarrelsome, and the fear of severe discipline could not prevent his engaging in brawls with his fellows. For one of these offences, which came to the knowledge of the officers, he was sentenced three months to the guard house, which meant he should work on the road with an armed guard over him. I had been his guard several times, and he made no attempt to escape. It did not occur to me that he would, as we were 200 miles from a railroad. I grew careless, and one day when my back was turned he took to his heels. I saw him in time to have shot him, according to orders, but I could not do it. He had been my friend, and was endeared to me by a thousand remembrances of little kindnesses we had done each other. I let him escape, but I would not have put him to such a test had I been the prisoner and he the guard.

"I was sentenced to three months in the guard house and to leave the army in disgrace. When my time came to go my comrades made up a purse of twenty-six dollars for me. With this I purchased clothes, for my uniforms were, of course, taken from me. I walked a good part of the way from Utah, though I, of course, beat my way on boats and freight cars whenever I could."—Pittsburgh Times.

A Hair-Pulling Match.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., April 14.—Charlotte and vicinity seem to have been in a bellicose state lately. While rumors of a "fight" have been going on in the city an actual engagement took place not far from here a day or so ago.

Miss Jennie Jerome and Miss Mary Ellington, daughters of two prominent gentlemen of Clark township, had a lively little "mill," in which Miss Jerome knocked Miss Ellington down three times. The affair took place on the banks of a small stream on Mr. Jerome's place. Miss Ellington was there fishing. Miss Jerome came up with a party of friends and accused Miss Ellington of making some uncomplimentary remarks about her. Miss Ellington denied any knowledge of the remarks having been made, whereupon Miss Jerome told her she told a lie, and jumped on her, knocking her down three times. A general melee followed, in which there was pulling of hair, scratches and bruises. One of the party had a hand badly hit, and others' dresses were cut. It is not known who used the knives, but the injuries stated bore ample evidence of their having been used. All parties were up before Squire Eli Henderson for trial.

The Longest Day.

It is quite important, when speaking of the longest day in the year, to say what part of the world you are talking about. The latitude of a place changes the length of the day to a remarkable extent.

At Stockholm, Sweden, it is eighteen and one-half hours in length.

At Spitzbergen the longest day is three and one-half months.

At London, England, and Bremen, Prussia, the longest day has sixteen and one-half hours.

At Hamburg, in Germany, and Danzig, in Prussia, the longest day has seventeen hours.

At Warde, Norway, the longest day lasts from May 21 to July 22 without interruption.

At St. Petersburg, Russia, and Tobolsk, Siberia, the longest day is nineteen hours and the shortest five hours.

At Troms, Finland, June 21 brings a day nearly twenty-two hours long, and Christmas one less than three hours in length.

At New York the longest day is about fifteen hours, and at Montreal, Canada, it is about sixteen hours.

EAGLE PASS, TEX., April 11.—News received here reports a terrible occurrence near Lerdo, on the Mexican Central road, last Tuesday afternoon. After the arrival of the south bound train, Juan Rodriguez, a clerk, with the driver and porter, started in a wagon with the express messenger for the company's office at Lerdo, three miles distant. About a mile from the town some twelve men, concealed in the bushes, fired a volley on the clerk and his two companions. At the same time several mounted men charged on the wagon. The driver fell dead from his seat, but Rodriguez and the porter, dreadfully wounded, managed to get off. The clerk started for Lerdo, but fell dead as he reached the gate of the municipal custom house. The band captured the wagon and got away with the contents, which included not less than $24,000 in cash.

The Way to Benefit the Farmer.

AMERICAN, GA., April 10.—Representative Charles F. Crisp, having been accused by a St. Louis newspaper of being lukewarm in support of tariff reform has received letters asking him to define his position. He thinks the record of his eight years service in Congress, and his public addresses in New York, Massachusetts, Maryland, Virginia, Georgia and other States ought to satisfy any person familiar with current political events that he has been a consistent and an earnest advocate of that reform. But since he had been requested to state his views he again did so to-day as follows:

"Protection takes from the farmer by force that which is his reason of labor and gives it to the manufacturer in order that he may be able to compete where otherwise he could not.

"The way to living—the farmer is to reduce his cost of life—not deluge him with paper duties on agricultural products.

"He buys everything he uses in the protected markets, the dearest in the world, and sells everything he has to sell in the free trade markets, the cheapest in the world."

"Whenever you see a man going home with a quart bottle of whiskey and a half pound of bacon, you can bet all you are worth that at home there is a whole gallon of misery to every ounce of comfort.

"I hear that Mrs. Barlow is disputing her late husband's will." "Why, I thought he left everything to her." "So he did, but she never let the old man have his own way. It's a matter of principle with her."

"The American girl is as good a horsewoman as her English sister, and has as much, if not more endurance and dash. At Albany, Ga., the other day, Miss Leila Venable, of Atlanta, participated in a fox hunt, kept up with the leaders, and, after seven hours' continuous riding was in at the death.

"A colored friend of mine one day last week got into Carson Creek, in No. 6 township, and some of the chief mooks came near being drowned. The creek was up and the wagon in which the corpse of a child was washed down the stream and the coffin was washed out and carried a hundred yards or more down stream."—Newberry News.

"A friend was bewailing in the company of Mr. W. S. Gilbert, the dramatist, that his wife had just presented him for a son. What was his name? 'I do with them'—asked the poor man. 'I don't know what to name them.' 'Oh,' said Mr. Gilbert, 'call the first Kate, the second Duplicate, and the third Triplicate.'"

"An apple tree bears apples, and a grape vine bears grapes, but it does not follow that all plant names are to be taken thus literally. An exchange relates that a young husband came home to dinner the other day and found his wife unusually high spirited. 'Oh! Willie,' she said, 'the nurseryman was here this morning and I ordered some pie-plant. He is going to have it set out right away, and by next summer he says it will be ready for use. Won't it be nice? I can go into the garden any day and pick a fresh pie for your dinner!'"
