He will be sixty-six years old in January next. Has always been hearty and enjoyed good health. About seven years ago a few white spots appeared on the second joints of the middle ingers of the left hand. Soon thereafter similar spots appeared on the right hand, then on his legs and face. There was no burning, itching or painful sensation felt. When for Corvallis, Oregon, where, by appoint-ment of Bishop Duncan, he goes to take charge of the principal Methodist Church the spots appeared on his face he became alarmed and applied to the doctors for something to stop the change, but they told him they could do nothing to prevent it. Some of his friends recommended washing in teas made from different plants. He tried some of these, but the spots seemed only to grow the faster. In about five years he was a white man. His skin is much more sensitive to heat than when it was black, and blisters easily.
