After the Battle. Only those commanding corps and divisions have posts from which they survey a battle field while the fighting is on. If the fight is furious all along the line, even the general in command may not be able to take in over a half mile of front. One may have been in a dozen battles without witnessing more than the manœvers of a brigade Battles usually end in withdrawal and pursuit. In either case nearly all the troops on both sides are put in motion and so men who have been fighting all day march away and see only the dead and wounded in their front. But very few wounded are brought in by night. and the dead can wait for the sun to rise. To move about on the field at night, is to take your life in your hand. There are ghouls robbing the dead who will fire upon you, and there are wounded men who will treat you as a foe. There are riderless horses galloping about, while others maddened with the pain of wounds, will

It is when morning comes again that those left behind to bring in the wounded, bury the dead and collect the equipments, scattered over miles of ground, perhaps can see and fully realize how fierce and deadly the conflict was. The dead are not all on the battle lines. Here, where the reserves were posted, a mile in the rear, are the first of them. They had been killed by solid shot and bursting shell. They are lying in heaps, and in nearly every case the face, is covered by poncho or Blanket. Down this front of a mile in length we find a dead man here and there as we advance, sometimes two or three together, but there are no wounded. They were removed under fire. Half a mile in the rear of the battle line we come upon the first of the men killed by the musket fire. They were not really under fire, but acting as supports, and yet the ranks lost heav-

been interfered with. Nine out of ten are lying broad on their backs with arms outstretched; their feet are pointed out all around the compass, but more of them lie with their heads to the east than in any other direction. The men shot in the head are lying at full length; those shot below the neck have one foot drawn up and their fingers are clinched. There is not on any face what you would call a look of pain or anguish, and neither do you find smiles and placidity. Look into the faces of 100 men killed in battle, and you will find the same general expression, whether young or old. It is a look of surprise and fear. This look rests on the faces of men killed in their tracks, as it were. The mortally wounded man may turn on his side to die, and you may find him with a smile on his face, he has had time to breathe a prayer, ing anecdote, which, it says, will make even a Sunday School scholar smile during prayer time: At the opening of exercises of the Five Points Missions School, in New York, many years ago, a class of street gamins had been tutored to answer a sort of catechism. The beam will be seen twentyfive miles before it strikes the horizon, and after that it will be reflected on the sky for a distance of thirty-eight miles further. The largest light on the coasts of the United States can only be seen twenty-eight miles in clear weather. It is a good omen, thinks the New York Sun, that this high development of electric lighting is in the interests of peace and for the preservation of human life. Hitherto the searchlights on warships have represented the greatest concentration of electric light rays.

The steer was so persistent that at last the 'cow's patience gave way and, taking a determined and vicious charge on him, punished him severely, though he was her own offspring, says Popular Science Monthly.

The steer felt badly hurt, not only in body but evidently in mind as well, and immediately started out of the yard and off down the lane toward the pasture where were the rest of the stock, bellowing vengeance at every step in a language which was unmistakable to the bystanders and which the mother well understood, as she ceased eating and listened intently to the threatenings of what was to come. When these died away in the distance she resumed her ration, but with evident apprehension. In due time the steer was seen returning, bringing with him a companion larger and stronger than himself. As they approached the rumblings of rage and revenge could be again heard, which grew louder as they came nearer. The cow took in the situation at once and was now terror-stricken. As her assailants rushed into the yard she dodged them and rushed out at lifeand-death speed and away toward the rest of the stock in the field with her pursuers close on her track.

The Price of Cotton.

WASHINGTON, November 2.-Senator George, chairman of the committee on agriculture, which has had under investigation the causes of the low price of gation the causes of the low price of cotton, stated to-day, in answer to a question as to the probable price of the present crop, that he had given some attention to the matter, but, owing to the conflicting elements entering into the problem, he hesitated to express any positive opinion. He stated there were several facts in the present situation which naturally pointed to higher prices for the present crop, which, from the best the company. for the present crop, which, from the best information obtainable, promised to be a short one. A. B. Shepperson, one of the best authorities in the United States, estimated the present crop at about 6,500,000 bales. Mr. Neill, of New Orleans, on bales. Mr. Neill, of New Orleans, another high authority, estimated it at about seven and three-quarter millions. Senator George stated that he regarded this estimate as too high, but if it were correct, still there would be a large shortage. Mr. Thomas Ellison, of England, one of the highest authorities on the attention of the highest authorities on the state. cotton question, estimates that the world's requirements, to be supplied out of the present crop, would be 8,174,000 bales. These facts, in the natural order of things, pointed to higher prices.

On the other hand, there are strong elements against high prices. One of these is the largely decreased purchasing power of our agricultural population, coming from the low prices of agricultural products prevailing in the last few years. This tends strongly to lessen the demand for manufactured cotton goods, and, as a consequence, means low prices.

Another serious factor tending to lower prices is the anticipated contraction of the currency since the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law. This repeal puts the United States on a gold basis—so as to make the price of cotton depend on the supply or scarcity of gold. The demand for gold will be great. The United States must enter into what Mr. Sherman calls the scramble for gold now Sherman calls the scramble for gold now going on in Europe. This demand will probably cause shipments of gold to the United States, and to that extent lessen the supply in Europe, where the regular price for cotton is fixed for the whole world. This lessening of the supply of gold in Europe will decrease all prices these including cotton.

Besides, this increased demand for gold will still further increase its purchasing power throughout the world, which is but another name for lower prices. How much this factor will counteract the strong influences I have mentioned for higher prices it is impossible to predict.
The crop situation, the demand and supply, favor higher prices, which I would confidently expect but for these adverse influences. Another adverse influence is the great power of those engaged in gambling in futures. These speculations have already fixed, as far as human agency at this time can fix, the future price of cotton for all the coming months, up to July, at a rate very little in advance of the present market rates.

- The Boston Advertiser says: "The circumstances that a dying man confesses to have committed, many years pre-viously, a particular murder for which another man was hanged, is by no means conclusive proof, though many people imagine it to be so, that an innocent life was in that instance sacrificed under forms of law. There are a a great many such stories, some recorded in lawyers' professional books, more of them floating around in country newspapers and verbal tradition. They are always pop-ular with folks who have a morbid fancy for sympathizing with everyone who is or has been subjected to legal trial for capital crime. It is a very common thing for persons of a certain class, who crave notoriety and reputation for mag-nanimity, to 'confess' to crimes of which they were never guilty. More than one such crank has offered to give himself up as 'Jack the Ripper.' Several such have declared that they committed the Borden murders. In the cases just mentioned there was some little courage required to declare, on one's dying bed, that he long ago committed a murder for which some other man suffered death. It is probable that at least 99 in a 100 such self-accusing people are guilty of nothing worse than lying."

These young ladies are all members of the Bergen Reformed Church of Jersey City. Organization was effected under the rules governing militia companies, the officers, with the exception of Capt. Laws, being elected by the members of

- The Bank of France is not entirely free from apprehension regarding the ability of the burglar and guards itself in a very careful manner. Every day, when the money is put into the vaults in the cellar, masons are waiting and at once wall up the doors with hydraulic mortar. Water is then turned on and kept the collar is flooded. A running until the cellar is flooded. A burglar would thus have to work in a diving suit and break down a cement wall before he could even start to loot the vaults. When the officers arrive next morning the water is drawn off, the ma-sonry is torn down and the vaults open-
