When freed from the small room, several of the Jurors were seen to lay down as if to take a nap, and the opinion became general then among the outsiders that a mistrial would be the result. Early Saturday morning the Jurors went back into their little room, and the Court room was soon crowded again. The people awaited patiently, but it was evident that they were in a strain and getting nervous.

in a strain and getting nervous.

About 10.30 o'clock there was a knock from the inside of the room, and in a few seconds the Jury filed into the Court amid the most profound silence. The foreman stated that the Jury wished to have read over the requests to charge submitted by both the prosecution and defence. This was done, his Honor consuming nearly an hour in carefully explaining each point

After about two hours of consultation, the Jury again emerged from their room, and it was evident that a verdict had been rached. The immense throng seemed as if they were scarcely breathing, the silence was so profound. It took but a few moments to go through the usual preliminaries, and when Clerk Watkins read the words "not guilty" there was a general roar of whoops and yells. A Brief Interview With Capt, Sullivan. Before the departure of Capt J. Mima Sullivan for his home yesterday we called on him and found him busily engaged in making preparations for his return to Greenville, from which place he has been absent and in prison here for more than twenty months.

Capt. Sullivan was quite cheerful and, with his always cordial grasp of the hand, begged us to be seated. After extending our congratulations, we asked him if he objected to an interview regarding his stay in Anderson. In a very courteous minner he replied:

"Not at all, if not too lengthy. You see I am pressed for time, as my train leaves for Greenville at 3 o'clock this p. m."

Well, Captain, prison life seems not to have made you apparently any older, we remarked.
"My friends tell me that I have stood it

Do you object to saying anything regarding your future plans, Captain?
"Well, really, my mind is so crowded with thoughts regarding this that I am with thoughts regarding this that I am not propared now to say anything definitely. However, I will say this much: After getting home I shall first take a little rest from the fatigue of the past ten days, and then commence the consideration of a proposition of an investment in what I regard as a very promising mineral prospect in your County, and if I am not disappointed it is very probable that my return here will not be very far in the distant."

were all surprised, but by inquiring a little found out there was a crowd from Lebanon going to picnic there. Of course, this only added to our or j. yment. And we were a noisy crowd, indeed. We ran races and cut up much until about 1 o'clock, and cut up much until about 1 o'clock, and then came dinner. O'course this was the most erjoyable of all things. And we lingered over it a good time and then spent an hour or two fishing—on dry land. Then it commence thundering, and we went as fast as we could to the city of Cherry, and just did every a wetting. All had a delightful time, and Miss Nettie has the they's of all who attended. Rain is badly needed. The farmers would gladly welcome a shower nowmore especially those who would like to begin work again. A crowd of young people from this com-munity spent a few hours at High Shoals last Saturday afternoon and came back that night to the lawn party at Dr. R. E. Thompson's. They report a very pleas-Miss Kate Stevenson, one of Moffatts-

Our popular bachelor was honored with a visit from six young ladies a few days ago. We think he enjoyed the day very much, with the exception of getting his finger badly mashed, but then when nicely tied up by one of the dear girls we think he fair himself fully paid for the unfortunhe feit himself fully paid for the unfortunate accident Guess who the young man was that asked a certain young lady to be his sweet-heart and she told him no? By our faces may oftentimes be told the life within we live, and a bright sunny face a welcome will always find to any place or home. A pure, kind and gentle soul is worth more than riches to a youth, for if he has them he will most assuredly have friends, even though they may be poor. Combine a homely face with a noble heart and that face is no longer homely.

Nobody's Darling.

Memory of Little Kathleen Sullivan Again comes death among us With quick and silent tread, Another gleeful infant
Is numbered with the dea!.

Life seems to lose its beautr, The empty hands and heart are longing for the darling From whom they had to part. And yet, the sorrow lessens,

When Hope and Faith assures us

Grief loses half its pain

We'll see our loved again.

United now at Home, Three little white robed children Will seem to whisper "Come O, parents! Christ can comfort,

And make e'en sorrow sweet, Are laid down at his feet. Then think how He has blessed you, In giving you the care Of souls that in His Kingdom shall shine so bright and fair.

'Tie not the earthly journey

That can our hopes fulfill, We live for that Grest Future, And there no blight cau kill. Then think of little Kathleen By God's own angels kept,

Perhaps the self same angels
That watched here while she slep'.
