ALL FOR LOVE.

Brandon Clout, author, sat on the edge of his bed and gazed in dismal despair at the upturned sole of his boot.

On the table lay an almost completed novel, whose progress had revealed a dual check. Firstly, the supplies had become exhausted, which, secondly, allowed the author time to think of the woman he loved, and this always made him so utterly miserable that he could not bring his thoughts to bear upon anything but the apparent hopelessness of the state of man.

"Well, Brandon, my boy," he mused bitterly, "you've reached the end at last. Assets, 10 cents; liabilities, an empty stomach and a land-lady's bill for $50."

He had thought of suicide before, but he was young and clung to life, had it was, living more on hope than substance.

The only other alternative was starvation, and this he considered worse still. He could not have labored manually if he had got work to do, for having been born in the purple he had always counted poverty out of his life, so had learned no trade. He dropped into his chair again and picked up the manuscript of his novel. How beautifully smooth it read. What a grand plot it was, and what a character was the poor, struggling, ambitious loving journalist—"A Fin de Siècle Fool." Ah, if he could but finish it! No more starvation, no more lying to widow landladies, no more dreaming of the woman he loved, but would not marry.

While he sat thinking of what might be there came a knock at the door so timid that he did not notice it until it was repeated thrice.

"The landlady," he thought, without rising.

However, it was not the portly form of the widow that met Brandon's gaze when the door opened, but a sweet little vision of a girl encased in sables. He started to his feet with an exclamation as she came into the room, the smile on her face lighting up the apartment like a ray of summer sunshine.

"My dear Minnie," he cried as she offered her chair and spilled her of her merriment and joy, "what in the world has come here?"

"Christy! Love-love, but—"

"Christy! Seven-eighths of a woman's nature. It has ruined many a woman and—"

"Now it's going to save a man," she interposed, with a smile, which died from her eyes as she glanced around the room. "You don't appear to be very comfortable, and no fire. You said in your letter you were making your fortune. That is not true."

Brandon was seated on the edge of the table looking at nothing in particular.

"Perfectly," he answered, shifting uneasily. "Only, you know, Minnie, it's slow work. There are so many at the game, and I never was clever."

"You have grown pessimistic. Poor Brandon!" and she caught his hands. "How gold you are! Why don't you have a fire?"

The author did not answer.

"Kiss me," she said in a low, sympathetic voice. "No word, no words, no money, oh!" And she crossed his hand fondly. "You have not made much progress in the royal road?"

"Don't you understand, Minnie, I have endeavored to earn my own living honestly, endeavored to be independent of any man, and I want to continue so. There are enough parasites in the world. It has been a bit of a struggle, I'll admit, but I have grown accustomed to it."

"Brandon," was Minnie's solemn response, "I want to show you the folly of your independence. Did you think I could not read between the lines of your letter to me? A man who is making his fortune or who is earning a living and has hopes for the future does not ignore the woman he loves to forget him and marry some other man. Brandon, you do love me, don't you?" She placed her hands upon his shoulders and looked up into his face.

He shut his eyes for a moment, his lips quivered, and he did not speak, but he smoothed her fair hair softly.

"Then you will come away with me!" she pleaded. "You will sink your foolish spirit of pride and independence and make me a happy woman?" And she nestled her head on his arm.

"Not long ago, when you were rich, you loved me, and we were to be married, but when you lost your all in those wretched companies you would not be my husband, though my fortune is ample for both."

"I wish I could swallow my wretched pride, but I cannot. I could not live on your money in your house. My inmost feelings would cry shame at me. My position would be unbearable."

Minnie shivered.

"You are cold!" he asked.

She nodded.

"Well, you had better be going." And he handed her her fur. "It is no kind and good of you, Minnie, but I'll try a little longer for that fortune," and the ghost of a smile lingered on his face for an instant.

"I suppose I could not help you in any way, Brandon? May I leave my checkbook?"

He attempted to speak, but a sudden attack of spasm stilled his tongue, and he sank into a chair and hid his face with his hands, while the lump that had risen in his throat almost choked him.

"Aren't you well, Brandon?" Minnie inquired, alarmed at his appearance. She placed her small hand lovingly upon his burning forehead, but he winced at the touch as though it was something that hurt him. "Are you ill, dear?"

"It was only a joke, darling, only a joke," she cried pitifully, her eyes wet with tears. "I am not going to marry Olcott."

Brandon sat upright suddenly, his face very white.

"You are not?" he caught her wrists in a frantic grasp.

"No, no! Forgive me, dearest. I thought if I told you that you would fancy I was happy and so be able to work. You said so."

Brandon sighed deeply, bent and kissed her.
