Remarkable History of the Dorn Mines.

It is not necessary to take a trip to Klondike or to wend your way to the mountains of the far west to find the gold fields. They lie close to home. It may prove a surprise to many to know that gold in quantities of a paying nature are being every day taken from the rocks near McCormick, S. C., and that the wells of McDuffie county, Ga., wait for the man who will put in the necessary machinery to bring forth the yellow metal. Even the sand of Rae's creek has gold in it and the bed of the Savannah holds grains of the oniferous substance.

Men in the past have worked these places and added to their store of gain by finding gold.

The McCormick mine has a most interesting history.

To hear of the ups and downs of the men who first discovered gold there, one should get Mr. Wm. Howard, of the Great Eastern Shoe Company, to tell the story to them. He was interviewed by the Herald man and here is his story of the Old Dorn gold mine:

Lighting a cigar, Mr. Howard began:

"Way back yonder in the early fifties old Billy Dorn owned much land near McCormick. He discovered that gold was in the soil. That was after he had returned from a fruitless search for the yellow metal in California, having gone out there with the many in the days of '49, when the mad rush of the gold seekers took place. Among those who went was Mr. Joseph Bell, who visited Mr. Dorn shortly after the latter had started mining near McCormick in a crude way, using such implements as he could find to get out the gold from the sand of Persimmon Branch, nearby. Mr. Bell tried to persuade Mr. Dorn to put in a mining plant, but the old man decided to toil on in his crude way taking out more gold than one would suppose.

"Bell had learned scientific mining in California and saw that not only was there gold in the creek, but that there was gold a plenty in the many rocks that lay about. In fact they were literally filled with the precious metal. It was what miners called invisible gold. To get the gold out a crusher was needed. The rocks had to be ground up finely and the particles washed and put through certain other processes before any pure gold could be obtained.

"Finally Bell dissuaded old man Dorn to go in with him and procure a pounding mill. The mill was erected on the branch and the rocks hauled to it by means of steer teams. The idea was a good one, the gold in the rocks was obtained in large quantities. The two men got out from $500 to $1,000 worth of gold per day.

"Dorn got enormously rich. He had discovered that he had a veritable Klondike, or that is what he would have called it had he lived in this day.

"He was most generous with his new found wealth. None asked aid but what were given freely. He helped build many churches, gave funds towards all kinds of missionary work, paid all the debts of his relatives and lived in a simple way with all his wealth.

"When all the rocks near about had been used, it was found that the foundation stones of several negro cabins on Persimmon Branch were the stones that contained gold. Dorn came to the cabins and the rock was ground up. One chimney composed of the stones panned out $1,000 worth of gold.

"The idea of sinking a shaft and mining under ground then was suggested and Mr. Dorn and his partner sunk a shaft and worked towards the south of the creek. They did not discover so much gold in this way as he had otherwise, and it never occurred to them to work north of the creek.

"Mr. Dorn finally sold the mining land to Mr. McCormick, the inventor of the McCormick reaper. The 1,200 acres brought $25,000, a small price considering the gold there, but Dorn was of the belief that the land had been worked out. The ways of fate are strange and Dorn died a bankrupt, having paid too many debts of other people. He may be said to have given his immense wealth away broadcast. Several efforts were made to work the land for gold by others after Dorn's death, but none seemed to understand getting at the precious ore.

"Bruce & Co. worked it a bit, but gave up. They said it did not pay. They had been miners in California, but had not learned like Messrs. Dorn and Bell to find gold in the earth about Persimmon Branch.

"Recently a new firm has taken hold of the mining lands and are meeting with great success. They work where Mr. Dorn never thought to—on the north side of the creek. They have struck rich ore, have put in improved machinery from a joint stock company and are making McCormick a Klondike on a small scale. An expert has prospected for miles around the place and says that there is gold in large quantities all about there. The ones now working the land are Dunlap and Beegs. Dunlap has had much experience in mining matters and Beegs is furnishing the money to equip and run the plant. The gold lands extend for 25 miles around McCormick, 'tis said. The veins run across the Savannah into Lincoln county, where discoveries of gold have been made lately. It is said that enough has been taken out of the rocks by the owners, who recently bought property on the vein, to pay for the land. They own 250 acres. The owners are J. Frank & Son, of this city, dealers in farm lands. They have specimens of ore on exhibition here.

"There is also gold near Calhoun Falls, S. C., but has not been much worked."

Mr. Howard tells of a party who lived in West End some years ago, who found gold in the bed of Rae's creek. The party, Mr. Hook by name, would get from $1 to $1.50 worth of gold out of the creek almost every day or so. He understood how to find the valuable substance, and although many others tried to follow his example, they never succeeded in finding gold in the sand.

Then there was Bob Todd, who lived in Hamburg, who found gold in the Savannah, but in very small amounts. He gave up in disgust just after the war. The late Gen. Summers, of this city, found gold in McDuffie county, and from what can be learned, parties now are at work up that way seeking what is in the soil of an oniferous nature.

But the Old Dorn mine leads them all in output, as can be seen by the traveler on the C. & W. C. road as he passes McCormick. The old crushing mill is in ruins, but on the other side of Persimmon Branch the new plant is grinding the gold from the brown rocks.—G. W. Reab in Augusta Herald.

For the Housewife.

Raw cabbage is much more digestible than when cooked. A cabbage salad made from a raw, fresh and crisp head of cabbage, and served with a French dressing, is much improved if garlic is rubbed in the bowl from which it is served.

A cold tomato sauce excellent for cold meats is made from peeled whole tomatoes from which the seeds are pressed out. The tomatoes are then chopped and afterward strained, the mixture put in a bowl and seasoned with salt, a little onion juice, lemon juice, a dash of cayenne and a little olive oil.

The use of peppercorns in lieu of ground pepper is to be recommended. Thrown into a soup or stew or simmer of any kind, they produce the flavor without any digestive irritation. The corns, as they are called, are simply the grain or berry of the plant before being ground to the pulverized pepper of commerce.

Splendid soft gingerbread is made with one cup of gold molasses, one-half cup of water, one-half cup of butter, one-half teaspoonful of ginger, one-half teaspoonful of soda or salaratus, two cups of flour, two eggs and a pinch of salt. Bake in square tins and cut in squares. Cut the squares open and put in bits of preserved ginger, and cover each square with frosting.

A medical journal advises against the excessive use of salt. It is first of all a perversion of taste, the condiment destroying the flavor of delicate dishes if too pronounced. Furthermore, it is asserted that an excessive use of salt seriously overtaxes the kidneys to remove it, and that many cases of derangement and diseases are due to this excessive use. The salt habit, it is added, is easily acquired, and persons indulging themselves soon reach a point where nothing is palatable that is not strongly impregnated with salt.

The secret of washing well any woolen goods lies chiefly in having the different waters of equal temperature, with none of them at any time too hot to put the hand in comfortably. Soap should not be rubbed on the article, but used in the form of thin suds. It should be a good white soap, too. A little borax is probably the best thing to soften the water. For washing blankets or baby flannels it is to be preferred. Woolens should not be wrung by the hand, but rinsed or dried by squeezing. Woolens of any sort should never be allowed to freeze.

CHINESE DO NOT KILL.

Suicide the Favorite Method of Taking off of Celestials.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 2.—Mr. Wu, the Chinese minister, received a cablegram from Peking this morning. No allusion was made to the death of the emperor, although it referred to the banishment of Chang Yen Hoon, his predecessor here. He is, therefore, disinclined to believe the newspaper dispatches, although he would not be surprised to learn that his sovereign is dead. Minister Conger has notified the department of State that the emperor is ill, but has sent nothing to confirm the newspaper reports of his death. Both Mr. Wu and Col. Denby are very skeptical as to the story of the emperor's assassination.

No emperor of China was ever assassinated, so far as history goes. The dignity and sanctity of his person makes such a thing almost impossible, except by a maniac, but suicide is a frequent method of escaping disgrace and humiliation. Several emperors have died by their own hand. Hwai Tsung, the last emperor of the Ming dynasty, killed himself because he was deposed by the Manchus, the family of the present monarch, who are known as the Tsings.

Offenders are often allowed to commit suicide to save their honor. This privilege was granted to Prince Chin in 1861, when he was held responsible for the British invasion. Tseng, the commander of the Chinese fleet, committed suicide in 1895 to cover the humiliation of his defeat by the Japanese, and only a few months ago one of the most prominent ministers was given his choice between suicide and banishment.

Suicide is not a disgrace; it is often used as a means of revenge. The severest punishment a man can inflict upon an enemy is to commit suicide in his house or upon his doorstep, because a curse will always hang over it, and if Kuang Hsu wanted to punish his aunt, the dowager, for deposing him, he could select no more effective method of making her miserable than to take his own life in her presence or in her apartment.

For a similar reason the assassination of the emperor would not be desirable by his enemies or his successors. In the first place the whole people of China, from the emperor down to the most ignorant coolie, are in perpetual and irresistible bondage to the Fung Shuy, the spirits of the dead, who retain their interest and activity in the affairs of the living and exercise an overpowering influence over the minds, the acts and the fortunes of men.

This is the secret of ancestral worship. It is the theory that the greater influence a man exercises in life the more power his spirit will have over the destinies of mankind after death. Therefore, shrines are erected to great men by those who want their favor, just as we erect monuments in this country.

The emperor of the "son of heaven; the king of kings." While he is living his person is so sacred that no one except those authorized may touch him without suffering the penalty of death. People are not permitted to look upon him. When his ministers approach the throne they bow their heads to the floor and address him on their hands and knees. When he passes along the streets of Peking screens of matting are hung in front of all the houses and shops. Although there is no doubt a good deal of peeping, those who are guilty would undoubtedly be punished if found out. When he dies the emperor ascends among the gods where he continues to be a source of good and evil, and even such a rugged old iconoclast as Li Hung Chang would not take the chances of his interference with his plans. Besides that the emperor's successor is required to worship him. The same obligation rests upon the court, and it would be a little difficult to worship a man you had assassinated.

Nevertheless the Chinese are progressing rapidly in modern ideas. Reverence for their sovereign is moderating and assassination may have come in with innovations. At the same time it is difficult to attribute any motive for the empress dowager to murder her nephew. He has always been submissive to her. He has never resisted her will nor disobeyed her injunctions, and she knows exactly what she can do with him, whereas Prince P'u Wei, the grandson of the late Prince Kung, who is said to have been selected for the throne, has a very different character and disposition. Instead of being weak and vacillating and obedient to a woman's will, he is a vigorous, independent, high-spirited and ambitious young man, who is not likely to work well in harness. He will make the dowager a great deal more trouble than Kuang Hsu ever did, and it is doubtful whether she will be able to control him at all after he becomes accustomed to the exercise of power and gets a firm grip on his scepter.

His grandfather, Prince Kung, who died last May, was the most powerful and able statesman in the empire during his generation, and filled what corresponds to the prime minister in other nations for more than 40 years. When Hien Fung died childless in 1871 it was proposed to place Tsai Chang, the son of Prince Kung, upon the throne, but it was deemed in the highest degree inexpedient because it would necessitate the withdrawal of Prince Kung from official life. Tsai Chang is a strong man, like his father, and P'u Wei, his son, who is now 19 or 20 years of age, is said to be very much like him.

Prince Kung was the pioneer in progress, but he was wise and prudent and restrained the more radical reformers. If he had lived, Kang, the reckless Cantonese adviser of the emperor, would never have brought about the trouble that has recently occurred.

The story that Tsi An, the empress dowager, was once a barmaid is interesting but untrue. Likewise the yarn that she printed some time ago about her rescue from drowning by Li Hung Chang when she was a slave and he a young soldier. In the first place there are no barmaids in China. In the second place, Tsi An and her sister, Tsou An, were the daughters of a Manchu general, and she never saw or heard of Li Hung Chang until long after she was married to the emperor Hien Fung and Li came to Peking to receive his reward for putting down the Tai Ping rebellion. During the first years of the regency he made himself very useful to her. She recognized his ability and harnessed him to her chariot.

It is equally untrue that the empress dowager is opposed to progress. She is the most progressive woman in China. It was largely through her influence that the Burlingame embassy was sent out to open up connection between China and the world in 1870, and that in 1872 Yung Wing and 30 other Chinese boys were sent to the United States to be educated. She has been the most active and consistent supporter of Li Hung Chang ever since he began to introduce modern notions, and it has been from her that he has received his greatest encouragement.

There is no doubt that Chang Yen Hoon, the former protegee and recent rival of Li Hung Chang in the taungli-yamen, has been banished to Lii, over in the interior of Asia, on a mystery about that, and it might have been expected for several reasons. He is a Cantonese and the empress is a Manchu. There is a hereditary hatred between the two races, which are as different as the Swedes and Spaniards. He is a partisan of England; she is a partisan of Russia. He was born a patron of Kang, the Cantonese reformer, who has made all the trouble and undoubtedly assisted him to escape.

Doctors Can't Cure It!

Contagious blood poison is absolutely beyond the skill of the doctors. They may dose a patient for years on their mercurial and potash remedies, but he will never be rid of the disease: on the other hand, his condition will grow steadily worse. S. S. S. is the only cure for this terrible affliction, because it is the only remedy which goes direct to the cause of the disease and forces it from the system.

I was afflicted with Blood Poison, and the best doctors did me no good, though I took their treatment faithfully. In fact, I seemed to get worse all the while. I took almost every so-called blood remedy, but they did not seem to reach the disease, and had no effect whatever. I was disheartened, for it seemed that I would never be cured. At the advice of a friend I then took S. S. S., and began to improve. I continued the medicine, and it cured me completely, building up my health and increasing my appetite. Although this was ten years ago, I have never yet had a sign of the disease return.
