

BILL ARP'S LETTER.

Answering the Query of a Correspondent Asking About Bacon.

Atlanta Constitution.

A friend writes me from Florida that bacon will not keep well in that climate, and that the old settlers say it always gets rancid. He wants to know if there is any remedy for this. Yes, I think so, unless hogs fattened on pinders are different from those fattened on corn.

This reminds me of a war story. In 1864 my wife and half a dozen little children found refuge from the foul invader at her father's plantation on the upper Chattahoochee river. There was no white man there or near there save her old father, Judge Hutchins. There were about a hundred negroes, more than half of them too old or too young to work. Food for our soldiers was getting scarce every day and orders came that every farmer should be tithed—that is to say, he should give up to the government agents a portion of his corn and meat and beef cattle. A mounted detail from the home guard was sent out with the wagons to enforce the order and gather in the supplies. There was nobody to resist them, for everybody was in the army save the old men and invalids and women and children. Late one evening a company of thirty men came to Judge Hutchins' house and rudely informed him that they came for bacon and beef cattle. The judge very calmly told them he had none to spare. For a while they parleyed with him but finally demanded the key to his smokehouse. My wife and children and two other little grandchildren listened in fear and anxiety. They knew that the judge was a fearless man, but there were so many well armed men against him, the odds were fearful, and when he refused to give up the key, they said they would arrest him and break down the door.

Then he pleaded with them in a trembling voice and said to the captain: "Here is my daughter and her little helpless children and here are two others whose mother is dead and their father is in the army. I have but four sons and they are in the army. My two sons-in-law are there. Here on this place are fifty or sixty negroes who are too young or too old to work, and it is a struggle for us all to live. I am alone and getting old. I have done my share for the confederacy and cannot do more. Now I know that you can overpower me or kill me and take away the little meat I have saved for these helpless ones, but let me tell you, captain, the first man who goes to that door to break it down will be a dead man before he can do it." His black eyes flashed as if lit up by sparks of fire and his voice no longer trembled. He was desperate. Lightly he ascended the stairs, where he had two double-barreled guns well loaded, and planting himself by the window that overlooked the smokehouse, he said, "Now break that door if you dare to," and the percussion lock went click, click. The captain looked at the door and then at the judge. There was an awful silence for a few moments. My wife and children had heard it all and trembled. Some of the negroes had gathered at the cabin doors, and old Sam dared to exclaim in a low, husky voice, "Better not—better not—old massa kill you—kill you shore."

The captain suddenly reconsidered. "Come, boys," said he "it's getting late; and there ain't no use in fighting about a little meat. We can report the case to headquarters and if we are ordered back we can try it again, I reckon." Without saying goodbye or farewell they left.

That night about midnight the judge called up old Jack and Virgil, whom he knew he could trust, and had the joints of the meat and a part of the sides carried quietly down to the old blacksmith shop on the bank of the river. With a pick and shovel the cinders and earth in the old hearth were soon excavated and a chamber fashioned that would hold and hide a thousand pounds. It was buried there and the hearth was covered just like it had been. Some scattering charcoal filled in the spaces and some was left on top and the black old basket placed where it long had been. With shovel and wheelbarrow the surplus earth was taken down the river bank and tumbled in and then all was quiet on the Chattahoochee. The burial of Sir John Moore was not more silent. In January, 1865, I joined my family at the plantation and not long after the judge furnished us a good mule team and wagon and we returned to our home in Rome. The day before we left his hospitable mansion he opened the cache and found the meat all sweet and sound and we brought a good portion of it with us and it was as precious as gold. My wife says the charcoal purified it and kept it from tasting old or rancid. Now then I have answered my friend's question. He must get up another civil war and hide his meat in the hearth of an old blacksmith shop.

Earth and charcoal are both good disinfectants and preservers of flesh, and if I was in Florida I would pack my meat in charcoal, not dust, but small crushed coal. Before putting the meat down I would powder it from a pepper box with borax. Borax is almost universally used now. It is sure death to skippers and other vermine, and a druggist told me that the sale of it had increased a thousand per cent within the last five years.

When my family got home we found that it was not good to live by meat alone and we had to send down the river a hundred miles for a few bushels of corn and hid it near a mill in the country, because the outlaws and deserters were patrolling the land and taking everything they could find. A good friend brought us half a bushel of meal at a time on the sly, and so we got along. The memory of old Rowland Bryant is still precious to us for his kindness in those days of tribulation. It is encouraging to know that Armour & Co. have not abolished all the smokehouses in the land, nor drawn our home made meat into their mighty trust. Our farmers are generally raising their own meat and bring a good deal to town to sell, and my wife says that country lard is purer and better than any that comes from the packing houses of the west. Our home market is well supplied by our farmers with almost everything that is good to eat. Beef, pork, butter, chickens, eggs, potatoes, turnips, cabbages, beans and apples are in great abundance. Of course, we can't have mutton, for the negroes must have dogs and the candidates must have negro votes. I lost eight fine Merinos in one night and my neighbor, Mr. Dobbins, lost three hundred in five years, and quit the business. But with all our drawbacks, our people are on the upgrade. Seven cents cotton has helped greatly, and if our farmers will cut down the acreage still more, it will bring 8 cents next year and leave more land for wheat and corn. The southern farmers ought to form a mighty trust and regulate acreage and price. Our own county could regulate itself by organizing and combining with the local banks. Our average crop is 10,000 bales, and at 8 cents a pound would bring $400,000. About one-half of this could be carried and held by the more wealthy producers. The other 3,000 bales could get an advance of 5 cents a pound, or $30 a bale, from the banks on warehouse certificates. This would take only $150,000. Even $25 a bale would pay the cost of production and leave the margin for the producer, and this would require from the banks only $125,000. If every county was to do this a 10,000,000 bale crop would jump to 8 cents within sixty days. That's the way to meet trust with trust and defy the speculators. Why can't it be done?

BILL ARP.

Governor in a Hogshead

A good-natured philanthropist was walking along the docks one Sunday morning, when he found a boy asleep in a hogshead. He shook him until he was wide-awake, and then opened the following conversation:

"What are you doing here, boy?"
"I slept here all night, sir, for I had no other place to sleep in."

"How is that? Have you no father or mother? Who takes care of you?"

"My father drinks, sir, and I don't know where he is. I have to take care of myself, for my mother is dead; she died not long ago." And at the mention of her name the boy's eyes filled with tears.

"Well, come along with me. I'll give you a home, and look after you as well as I can."

The child thus adopted on the wharf was taken to a happy home. He was sent to a common school, and afterwards employed as a clerk in the store of his benefactor. When he became of age, his friend and benefactor said to him: "You have been a faithful and honest boy and man, and if you will make three promises, I will furnish you with letters of credit, so that you can start business in the West on your own account."

"What promises do you wish me to make?" inquired the young man.

"First, that you will not drink intoxicating liquors of any kind."

"I agree to that."

"Second, that you will not use profane speech."

"I agree to that."

"Third, that you will not become a politician."

"I agree to that."

The young man started in business in the West, and by minding his own business in a few years he became a rich man. At the close of the war he came East, and called upon his friend and accepted father. In the course of a happy interview the philanthropist asked his adopted son if he had kept his total abstinence pledge.

"Yes, sir," was the answer.

"Have you abstained from the use of profane speech?"

"Yes, sir," said the man with emphasis.

"Have you had anything to do with politics?"

The visitor—the adopted son, perhaps I should have said—blushed, and said: "Without my consent I was nominated for Governor of my State and elected. I am now on my way to Washington to transact important business for the State."

Did ever a hogshead turn out so good a thing as a teetotal Governor before? It had to be emptied of its wine before it could be a shelter for the little Arab who ran wild in that wilderness of marble and mortar, the great city of New York.

The streets and wharves of the great metropolis of commerce invite missionary effort, and the writer hopes that the little waifs afloat on the wave of outward life will not be neglected. —George W. Bungay, in National Temperance Advocate.

Before the Bar.

How many young men who are actors in the first part of this drama have ever rehearsed in thought the parts they may take in the last three acts?

Act I.—Before the bar of the saloon.

Act II.—Before the bar of the court.

Act III.—Before the bar of the prison.

Act IV.—Before the bar of God.—Youth's Companion.

A young lady asked a butcher for a dollar toward paying for a temperance lecture. She didn't expect to get it, but the butcher said: "There's your dollar. I've sold more meat in one day since this town went no-license than I used to in a whole week when we had saloons." What better temperance lecture than that could be delivered?

Chamberlain's Pain Balm Cures Others, Why not You?

My wife has been using Chamberlain's Pain Balm, with good results, for a lame shoulder that has pained her continually for nine years. We have tried all kinds of medicines and doctors without receiving any benefit from any of them. One day we saw an advertisement of this medicine and thought of trying it, which we did with the best of satisfaction. She has used only one bottle and her shoulder is almost well.—ANDRU L. Unexpected.

One of the district school trustees was a crank on the subject of fire, and when he called around with the examining board he always confined his remarks to a question addressed to the pupils as to what they would do in case the building should catch fire.

The teacher was acquainted with his hobby, so she prompted her scholars as to the answers they should give when he rose to pronounce his accustomed inquiry. When the board called, however, this particular trustee, perhaps from a desire to emulate his associates in their addresses, rose and said:

"You boys and girls have paid such attention to Mr. Jones' remarks, I wonder what you would do, now, if I were to make you a little speech?"

Quick as thought a hundred voices piped in unison:

"Form a line and march down stairs."

Not That!

This was actually heard in the Cracker district of Tennessee:

The mother shouted from the door of the cabin behind the trees:

"Yank Tyson! Tim Tyson!" she cried, "what yu'uns doin'?"

Two little boys raised their heads over a barrel 300 yards down the mountain.

"Foolin'," was the reply.

"Be yu'uns smoking?"

"Ye'um."

"Be yu'uns chawin'?"

"Ye'um."

"Be yu'uns chawin' twist an' smokin' cob pipe?"

"Ye'um."

"That's right. But if yo' let me kotch yo' smokin' them cigareet, I'll gi' yo' th' wust lammin' yo' ever hod in yo' lives. Yo' hear yo' ma?"

"Ye'um."—Detroit Free Press.

The Safest Part of a Train.

A party of travelers in a train were talking over their traveling experience and the danger of accidents, and finally the question arose as to the safest part of the train. Failing to settle the question among themselves, they called on the guard, and one of them said to him:

"Guard, we have been discussing the matter of the safest part of the train and want to know your opinion."

"Want to know the safest part, eh?" replied the guard.

"Yes, that's it."

"Well," continued the guard, "I've been on the line for 15 years and have been turned over embankments, 'busted' up in tunnels, dumped off of bridges, telescoped in collisions, blown off the line by cyclones, run into open switches and had other pleasant incidental diversions of a kindred nature, and I should say, gentlemen, that the safest part of the train was that part which happened to be in the works for repairs at the time of the accident."—London Telegraph.
